The city was in an uproar at this time, and under the impassioned appeals of the Moslem Mullahs, the authorities arrested him and he was brought to Oroomiah City. Surrounded by a howling mob of Mullahs and others, with yells of insult and cursing, dragged here and there, he was brought into the presence of the Serparest (the governor over the Christians.) The inquiry was made by the governor, "Why should you, a Moslem, be found teaching the Christian doctrine?" Mirza Ibrahim took out his Testament and asked in reply: "Is not this a holy book?" The Serparest acknowledged that it was. "Then am I not right in reading and teaching it?" "But how about Mohammed?" "That is for you to say. My faith is in Christ and his Word. He is my Saviour." Then the command was, "Beat him." The preacher at whose house he was seized was arrested with him, and both were beaten by the forrashees and the crowd. Mirza Ibrahim was knocked down and brutally kicked. The Serparest was not satisfied with the severe beating of his servants, so he got up with fury and took part in kicking the man in his face and breast; some in the crowd demanded his blood. After all this he was taken before the governor of the city, and there, in the presence of many dignitaries, reaffirmed his faith in Christ as the only Saviour of his soul. To the barbarous threats of the people he replied, "You may shoot me from the mouth of a cannon, but you cannot take away my faith in Christ."

He was then by the special effort of his friends, sent by the anthoritles of Oroomiah to Tabriz, there to appear before a higher tribunal, that of the Crown Prince. Absalom, one of the Christian young men that still followed him, by the permission of the general, went to see Mirza Ibrahim in the room where he was. They embraced each other and kissed and talked for a short time. Absalom then said, "I have a word for you now. It is not man who sends you to Tabriz, it is God. You are to bear witness to the guards and to the governor, may be to the Crown Prince. Stand firm." Then Mirza said, "I think it may be so. Tell the missionaries and my other friends to pray that God will increase my faith. Tell them of myself I have no power. God is helping me." Then they knelt and prayed together, the crowd looking in through the large, open Persian windows.

As they came out, the general spoke in a loud tone to the guards, saying, "I swear by the spirit of Jesus Christ that if you maltreat this man, or say a word against his religion, I will cause you to eat your own fathers."

Reaching Tabriz his guards delivered him to the keeper of the prison. This was the worst prison of Tabriz, if not of the country. He was in that prison for nine months. His body was wasting day by day, but his spirit was flourishing like a flower. He died in prison, and he will be counted hereafter by all in Persia among the noble and true martyrs for Christianity.

A FRIENDLY "SOD-RAISING" IN KANSAS.
(Photographed by Mr. F. Kiser, Am. S. S. Union Missionary.)

A Kansas "Sod-Raising."

It is a Familiar Scene in the Poorer Sections of that State—How the Jack Creek Sunday School was Founded.

DURING the terrible suffering in Kansas, Nebraska, and Colorado last winter (when the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD raised a generous fund for the relief of those farmers and others who had been made destitute by the long drought), mention was frequently made, in our correspondents' letters, of sod-houses and dug-outs. Mr. Frank Kiser, a missionary of the American Sunday School Union in Kansas, has taken a photograph of a typical sod-house in process of construction, which conveys a clearer idea of what such a building really is, than can be gathered from printed descriptions. Mr. Kiser writes this interesting incident in connection with the photograph which we reproduce on this page, through the courtesy of the American Sunday School Union:

"While following the divide road on the east side of Jack Creek in Phillips county, some time ago, I noticed from the top of a hill a little school-house on the opposite side of the creek. It stood high on the hillside, thus making it a conspicuous landmark. My first thought was, I wonder if they have a Sunday School? I turned my team toward it. The road turned hither and thither, and then came to the creek around a little knoll. I drove around expecting to find a ford, and came upon the scene that you see in the picture.

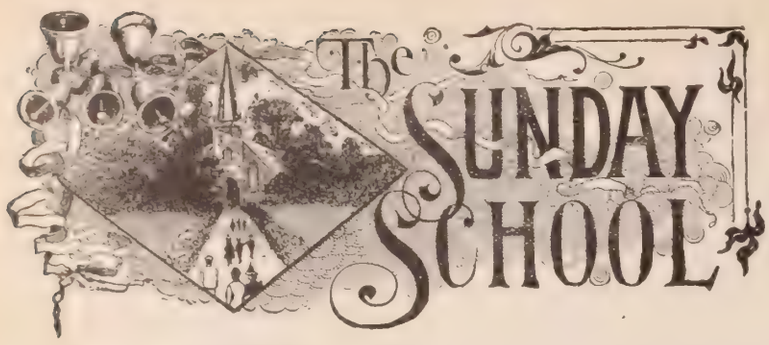
"You can see the hill back of the dug-out, and also the horses standing on the bank level with the roof of the house. The building on the right where the stovepipe projects from the roof is the old stone dug-out, but the family grew, and now they must have an addition, so the man has called in some of his neighbors, and they are having a 'sod-raising.'

"While a part of them are hauling strips of sod the others are laying it in place. You can see the window next to the wagon and the door to the right, also the ridge log that will form the comb of the roof when the gable is built up on the end nearest you. The roof will be made of brush laid on pole rafters and then covered with sod, and finally with a fine white earth that they get from the neighboring hills. The house stands on the bank of a beautiful spring branch, and the owner raises horses for a living.

"As I drove up, I passed the time of day and inquired about a Sunday School. At the mention of this magical name every one stopped work, and the mother, who went into the house when I came, now put in her appearance and had her say. They were afraid to venture, for all I talked earnestly to them. I was on my way to other work, and had determined to push on until I had the time for a meeting, but I told them that I very much wanted a picture first.

While waiting for one of the boys to come a hurried consultation was held among the men, and when through, the owner of the house said, 'I know that we ought to have a Sunday School, and if you will send us the supplies we will have one. I will stand good for that much. These 'kids' ought to be in Sunday School. Two-thirds of them never go anywhere, and we have to go six miles to class meeting.'

"It is needless to say that I agreed to the proposition, and now the children are in Sunday School."



DAVID AND GOLIATH.

S.S.Lesson for Dec.8. I.Sam. 17: 38-51. Golden Text: I. Sam. 17:47. By Mrs. Baxter.

NEITHER great victories nor great defeats come about without something to lead up to them. Little victories., i. e., victories in little things, prepare the way for great victories; and little failures, which do not lead to deep sorrow, confusion, humiliation, and cleansing, lead to great, sometimes irremediable, defeat. Saul and David strikingly illustrate this. Saul's first failures were neglected; he did not judge or discern himself; he did not accept the chastening of the Lord, and therefore nothing remained but that he must be "condemned with the world" (I. Cor. 11: 31, 32), and rejected by the Lord. David, on the contrary, took heed to the Lord, and set him always before him (Ps. 16: 8), and therefore he could say, "Because he is at my right hand, I shall not be moved."

David, even as a lad, was spoken of by God as a man "after his own heart." It is such whom our God can put to the proof, because he can count upon them. When Samuel was commanded by God to go to Bethlehem for the purpose of anointing the future king of Israel, and he sanctified Jesse and his sons, and called them to the sacrifice, David had been ignored by his father and his brethren; and on this important occasion he was left to keep the sheep. And he it was who proved to be the chosen of God. Yet David was not uplifted, and in no way did he manifest a spirit of retaliation against his kindred, or of self-consciousness, which would exult in the honor done to him after he had been so passed over and so little appreciated by them. It was for David to remain as little and unnoticed after his anointing as before. He knew that the Spirit of the Lord had come upon him, but he had to be patient and true to his shepherd vocation, as much as though no such thing had happened to him. There was a divine kingliness in his patient waiting until God should please to give the kingdom into his hands.

After God had rejected him, Saul still reigned; before man he was still the king over Israel; but the Spirit of the Lord departed from him, and the enemy of souls soon found a substitute; "an evil spirit from the Lord (i. e., permitted by God) troubled him." His servants discovered it, and suggested to him that he should seek one who, by the charm of music, might distract and soothe him. David's gift in music and song had already won him a reputation, and his first introduction to the court, where he was afterwards to reign as king, was as a minstrel who should quiet the spirit of the king when possessed by an evil spirit. David knew God. It was more than music which refreshed King Saul when David played upon his harp and sang the inspired songs which have helped the devotions of holy men and women for over three thousand years; it was the presence of God with David which overcame and conquered the presence of the enemy in Saul. But in his life at court David had his sore testings. Promoted to be Saul's armor-bearer, he was, nevertheless, not always at court or in the field: "David went and returned to feed his father's sheep at Bethlehem." It might have seemed that the life at court would unfit the young courtier for the rude life of hardship, and that the rough life of the farm would unfit the young shepherd for his life at court; but the Lord was with David and the future king was again victorious.

The humors of the possessed king were not the only tests in which David had to prove the might of an ever present God. "There came a lion and a bear and took a lamb out of the flock." What should the young courtier-shepherd do? Saul had plenty of money, he could easily replace the lamb, and David was a favorite with him. It was not worth while to risk his life for one lamb out of the flock. Such would have been the reasoning of the flesh. But David was God's king, God's anointed. Saul's courtiers had said of him: "The Lord is with him." What was becoming in one who was in the school of God studying his will for use in the future government of Israel? God did not leave his young servant; he was in charge, his present duty was to care for the sheep; his present faith that God would care for him.

"The Lord is my Shepherd: I shall not want. Thus armed by simple faith in God, he went out against the mighty beasts of the forest, caught them boldly by the beard and slew them, delivering the endangered lamb out of the lion's mouth.

Victory led to victory. Now Israel was in danger. The Philistines had come up in great force, and encamped against Israel. Saul and his army were arrayed against them. But one essential thing was lacking. The Lord was not with the rejected king of Israel. No wonder then, when a gigantic Philistine came forward to offer himself a champion of his people, if Israel could produce a man mighty enough, and reliable enough to represent the destiny of Israel in single combat with him, "Saul and all Israel were dismayed and greatly afraid." Just at this juncture Jesse sent David to the seat of war, not to take any prominent part, but only to carry provisions to his brethren and bring news of them to their father. It was when he the anointed of the Lord was ignored and his older and more muscular but unspiritual brethren, chosen before him to go to the battlefield. But personal wrongs could not drag down the kingly youth into the littleness of personal feeling; his country was dearer to David than himself, and the cause of God and of his people lay nearer to his heart than any one knew, except the God who was training him for office. It was at the very nick of time that David came into the field. The giant, having received no response to his challenge, the two armies were waiting only for the signal to engage in battle. Once more Goliath spoke out his challenge. and David's heart burned with shame when he saw the men of Israel flee from him sore afraid.

Another Victory Won

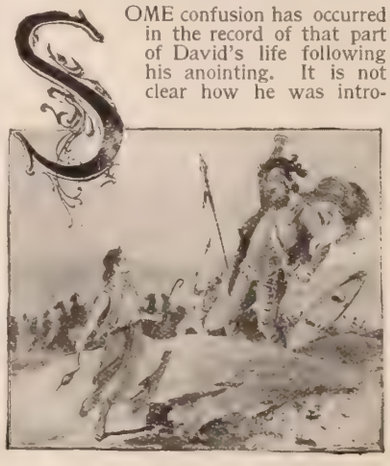
The young shepherd took higher ground than the men of Israel in his version of the matter, the man that should kill this Philistine would take away the reproach from Israel, "for," he said, "who is this uncircumcized Philistine, that he should defy the armies of the living God?" Another test, the biting sarcasm of his eldest brother, whose pride was wounded that God had preferred David before him. But the kingly youth only answered, "What have I done? Is there not a cause?" At last he gained an audience with the king and fearlessly offered to meet Philistia's champion single-handed. Now the fruit of former victories stood him in good stead, and when Saul doubted his powers, he could tell of the hand of God which delivered him from the lion and the bear, and Saul could see that the living God was with him.

But not with Saul's armor. Unaided, but a conscious instrument in the hands of the Almighty; unarmed, but by the secret covering of God his shield, the fearless youth met the mighty giant. Not by one leap, but step by step the young king elect had come to the point where he saw God in everything, and where victory was sure. What mattered it that his only weapon was a stone of the brook in a shepherd's sling? The unerring aim of the God who fought for Israel carried it to the temples of the boasting giant who had defied him: and with a mighty thud, the giant fell senseless on the earth, and victorious David with his own sword cut off the giant's head; and in company with Abner, the guard, bore it amid the acclamations of Israel to the feet of Saul, after he had accomplished the complete rout of the Philistine army. David's school time was not yet over; he had very much to learn: but let us also learn from him to be faithful in that which is least; that God may trust us also with great victories for his sake.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

SOME confusion has occurred in the record of that part of David's life following his anointing. It is not clear how he was introduced to Saul. From the sixteenth chapter it would appear that he was a favorite of Saul, and had become his armor-bearer before his fight with Goliath; yet in the seventeenth chapter, Saul is represented as not knowing him and asking Abner who he was. If David had been armor-bearer to the king, Saul would not have had to ask who he was; and if he had asked, Abner could easily have answered him. Many suggestions have been made in the way of explanation. The most probable, is that the passage describing the minstrelsy (I. Samuel 16: 14-23), has been misplaced and should follow the fourth verse of the eighteenth chapter. If this arrangement is the true one, we may conclude that after being anointed, David remained quietly at home working on the farm until the war broke out. The anointing and the illustrious station it betokened, do not seem to have affected his conduct. No effort was made to win fame or distinction. His eldest brothers joined the army, but he remained behind, attending to his father's flock. Jesse sends him to the camp at Shochoh, now called Shuweikeh, only a few miles from Bethlehem, where Saul's troops were assembled. David found them badly demoralized. They were on the east side of the Valley of Elah, now called Wady-es-Sunt, facing the Philistines on the west side. Between the two armies there was a ravine about twenty feet wide, through which in the winter months a swift boiling torrent pours. The sides are almost perpendicular rocks, about twelve feet high. To the edge of this ravine, a gigantic warrior, probably one of the descendants of Anak, came at intervals and challenged the army of Israel to produce a man to meet him in single combat. Such challenges were not unusual in ancient wars, but the champion's stature and strength, in this instance, rendered the challenge a taunt. The chronicler describes the man as being nearly ten feet high and wearing armor weighing about two hundredweight. David, who had merely come to bring supplies to his three brothers, listened with indignation to the giant's challenge. Had no one taken it up? To David, this man was not the terrible fighter that he seemed to Saul and his soldiers; he speaks of him contemptuously. No one had taken up the challenge. Then David will go himself. He is not afraid of him. The result is graphically told. His weapon was rude but it was effective. It succeeded when the ordinary weapons would have failed. It is so now in moral conflicts. The man who believes and uses the weapon that he understands, may seem poorly equipped, but he is very likely to succeed. There many a citadel of Satan that never could have been captured by educated and college-trained preachers, that has yielded to a few unlettered members of the Salvation Army. To David, the fight was between heaven and earth and there was nothing extraordinary in his own courage, seeing that God was with him. Danger had come to him before, in the shape of a lion and of a bear; now it was there in the shape of a Philistine. He met it in the same way. It was the same battle. The spiritual against the material; right and truth against brute force. True, the man looked formidable, and his weapons were terrible, but all wickedness is vulnerable somewhere; and as for the weapons, David is not the only one of God's servants who has turned them against their owners.



"SO DAVID PREVAILED OVER THE PHILISTINE."

The Lord will deliver thee into mine hand. David's confidence was not misplaced. There have been many conflicts in which God has given the victory to the weak. On the front of a building in Wales is a motto which may inspire those who attack gigantic evils. It is: "Without God, without all; with God, enough."

He will give you into our hands. Rev. C. H. Mead, speaking on this combat some time ago, said: "I can fancy David going to meet this Philistine. I think he would go singing, for he was fond of singing. I should not be surprised if he sang: 'The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?' Then he whirled his sling and the stone went straight to the giant's forehead. I don't know what Goliath said when it hit him. I am afraid it would not be a psalm, for he did not know much about that kind of literature. He would be more likely to say 'Such a thing as that never entered my head before.'"

David prevailed with a sling and with a stone. A man is always strongest with the tools and weapons he understands. The daily journals a few weeks ago reported the triumph of a druggist in Brooklyn over a burglar with a weapon of his own. He was sleeping in the room in the rear of his store, when he was awakened by a noise. Looking into the store he saw that a burglar had climbed through the transom and was trying to open his cash drawer. The druggist had no pistol and perhaps if he had had one, he might not have been so good a marksman as the burglar. But he was not without means of defence. He took a wide-mouthed glass and half filled it with ammonia. He concealed himself behind a show-case and when the burglar came towards him, he flung the ammonia in his face. The burglar dropped his booty and put his hand up to his smarting, burning eyes. He was frenzied with pain and was anxious only to get away. Probably no one but a druggist would have thought of such a weapon, but it served its purpose. The means of doing good are on the same principle. No one need think that he cannot work for Christ because of his not being eloquent or learned; if he will use the talent he has, he can do better work than he could do on other people's lines.

There was no sword in the hand of David. But that difficulty was soon removed. David used the Philistine's own sword to kill him. Like Haman who reared a gallows to hang Mordecai and was hanged on it himself, Goliath unintentionally provided a weapon for his own destruction. It is stated by some historians, though denied by others, that Dr. Guillotin who urged the French Constituent Assembly to use the machine for decapitation, that was ultimately adopted and bore his name perished himself under its knife. During the recent war between China and Japan the Chinese dug a mine and filled it with combustibles, intending to lure the Japanese over it and then explode the mine and blow them to atoms. But there was some mistake as to the signals, the mine was exploded when several companies of Chinese soldiers were over it, and they were killed by the very means arranged for the destruction of their enemies. The persecuting bishop who suggested to Louis XI the torture of the iron cage and with diabolical ingenuity contrived it so that the victim could neither stand up in it nor lie down, himself was imprisoned in it and learned by painful experience what an instrument of misery he had devised.

MR. HOWARD'S PERILOUS JOURNEY.

Through Russia and Persia to Van—His Letters Delayed—All Armenia in Anarchy and Christian Blood Still Flowing—The Terrible Harpoot Massacre.

DRENCHED with the blood of martyrdom, and her hills and valleys resounding with the es of her stricken children, Armenia nds to-day a spectacle of suffering for e whole world to gaze upon. Each day ltiplies the atrocities she has endured the hands of the Turkish butchers who ve, within a few months, massacred usands of her sons and daughters, d laid waste almost the entire gth and breadth of that beautiful land ich was once the site of the earthly en. The past week has again been pro- c of slaughter. At Karahissar, Arabkir, loupinar, Sivas, Tchoukmerzen, Erzin- n, Harpoot, and many other places the rds and Turks have perpetrated whole- e murders and swept large districts des- te. The villages round about Erzeroum ve been almost depopulated, the orders the slaughter of the Christians, as the slem troops admit, having come from nstantinople. At Sivas the massacre s terrible, and a like horror is reported n Marash. The ungovernable fury of t Turks spared neither age sex, and the brutalities prac d upon women and children not be described. In the eroum massacre it is now mated that fully 1,000 per- d, including women, many he victims being mutilated their slayers. Like the oth- almost all of the victims these recent massacres died th death of martyrs for the e of Christ. They fell in the slem war for the exterminati of the religion of Jesus in Minor.

he most startling news of th week was that contained in a legram, from Minister Ter- stating that eight mission dings at Harpoot had been ed and burned by the Turks about eight hundred per- massacred. The mission- s are believed to have es- d, but the gravest fears are ertained for their safety. The erican Board of Foreign Mis- s has at the Harpoot station othe Eastern Turkey Mission some four- missionaries, viz.: Orson P. Allen, Coline R. Allen, Rev. H. N. Barnum, My E. Barnum, Emma M. Barnum, Carol E. Bush, Mary L. Daniels, Egbert S. Ely, C. Frank Gates, Mary E. Gates, Hie Seymour, Crosby H. Wheeler, Susa A. Wheeler and Emily C. Wheeler, des a number of their children, make in a total of twenty-four. There are abit the same number at Van and about twnty at Bitlis. The Harpoot Mission dings were valued at over $75,000. It is ot known whether the Euphrates Colle in Harpoot was included in the gen- destruction, although such is probably e case. In all likelihood many of its st ents perished in the general slaughter at e hands of the fanatical Moslems. It is fficult to conjecture where the mission- ar could have taken refuge, as Harpoot is ar the Euphrates river, at the foot of th Kurdish mountains and a long distance fr the nearest mission. Serious concern is so felt for the safety of the mission- ar at Bitlis and Van.

e few facts that have come by the ca concerning the terrible tragedy at Hoot, give an intimation of the heart- reing details that may be expected when th whole story of that fiendish massacre be mes known. Many of the native Christians in the mission buildings were cruelly butchered. The houses in the vicinity of the mission were stripped of everything of value, and all stores of provisions were either stolen or destroyed. Sudden destitution has fallen on a large tract of country, and "thousands of men, women and children," the dispatch adds, "are homeless, naked and starving, nothing having been saved either from the fire or the despoilers. In all the villages throughout the Pashalik, there is the direst need of food and clothing.

At last the European Powers seem to have decided upon such concerted action as will result in a cessation of Armenian persecution, or in the dethronement of the Sultan and the breaking up of the Mohammedan power in Europe. Six great powers, England, Germany, Italy, Russia, Austria, and France are represented in Turkish waters by strong fleets, and before this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD reaches our readers, a crisis may have arrived that must either result in the pacification of Armenia and the guaranteeing of future protection, or in Abdul Hamid being swept from his throne. All conclude that the limit of forbearance has been reached and that Turkey is no longer entitled to consideration. All the Sultan's promises of reform have been broken, and he now finds that he has even lost the respect and support of his Moslem subjects. Rebellion in the army, and even among the palace guards, has struck terror into the heart of the monarch, at whose mandate so many thousands of innocent beings have perished. Like Belshazzar, he sees the handwriting on the wall that foreshadows the passing away of his power—

OUR COMMISSIONER PASSING THE BASE OF MOUNT ARARAT.

Mr. Howard's Route to Van lay along the Foot of "Kuh-i-nuh," Noah's Mountain.

a consummation which all Christendom would joyfully welcome.

Meanwhile, the condition of affairs in Armenia is one of universal panic. Goaded to desperation by the wrongs they have suffered, the Armenians have at last risen in armed revolt, and at several places have taken swift revenge on Turks and Kurds for the slaughter of their dear ones. At Zeitoun, it is reported, that twenty-six thousand Armenians have captured the barracks and are in possession of the place, and they have appeared in strong bands at other places. The Sultan has ordered out one hundred and twenty-eight battalions of reserves, in the hope of being able, by a last desperate measure, to restore order. At several points the missionaries are in great peril, and Minister Terrell has warned the Sultan that his government will be held responsible "if even a hair upon the head of an American should be touched." Three American warships are anchored in Turkish waters for the protection of Americans, but the real troubles are far in the interior and beyond the reach of any vessel.

Letters received from native sources in Van, and placed at our disposal, contain heartrending pictures of the condition of the Armenian sufferers in that section. They state, among other matters, that no relief is being distributed save by the American missionaries, and that the money raised for that purpose in England and through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, is all that stands between thousands of the destitute families and death from actual starvation. Another letter states that the American missionaries, Rev. Mr. Cole and Dr. Raynolds have gone from Bitlis and Van, and at the risk of their lives are now in the mountains giving food and clothing to the Christian refugees. At first, the Turkish Government officials proposed to the missionaries that they should turn over the relief funds to be administered through Turkish hands: but this they resolutely refused to do.

An eye-witness, who has seen the relief work in progress, writes that a deep impression is made upon the people by the earnestness and devotion of the Americans, who are regarded by the Armenians as almost divine messengers of rescue and mercy. Men and women run from their black tents or from their rocky hiding-places, their eyes streaming with tears of gratitude and clasp the missionaries' knees, and even prostrate themselves, kissing the hands and feet in their gratitude. Many missionaries have no shelter and are compelled to sleep on the naked earth. All attempts by the Armenian Relief Committee to succor their fellow-countrymen have been resisted by the government, and the agents of the Committee have been so terrorized by threats that they are compelled to abandon their work, which is now being conducted through the American missionaries. It is quite apparent that the Turkish Government intended that the remnant of the native Christians of Sassoun and Bitlis should perish of starvation, since they would not reject Christ.

Owing to the general excitement and the fact that the whole of Armenia is under martial law, direct communication with Van, the headquarters of our relief work, has been greatly delayed. Letters from Mr. Howard, our Commissioner, which should have reached us some time ago, are still, like many others, presumably in the hands of the Turkish postal authorities. Our Commissioner has forwarded, doubtless simultaneously with his letters from Van, photographs descriptive of his journey to Armenia, some of which are reproduced on this page. Knowing that it would be impracticable in the disturbed condition of the country to enter Armenia via Trebizond, he chose to pass through Russia and Persia, a much longer but safer route. The central picture shows the manner in which he traveled, the photograph having been taken at a point near the southern base of Mount Ararat, very close to the boundary line of three countries. With a skilful driver, a strongly-built vehicle suited to the mountain roads and Tartar horses that are used to such journeys and can travel all day long without fatigue, the journey has been made with as little delay as possible. Another illustration shows a resting station in the mountains near Delizshan, Russia, in a wild and gloomy, but beautiful country, not far from the Persian border. In the third photograph is seen the bane of the traveler, and the terror of both native and foreigner in that part of the world—the Kurds. Two brigands, disguised as shepherds, lie in wait along the road, watching for an opportunity to waylay, rob, and if need be, murder some unsuspecting traveler. Many besides Armenians have met their fate at the hands of those Kurdish murderers. Mr. Howard took the caravan route through Russia and Persia, via Batoum, Tiflis, Erivan, and Khoi, and so across to Van, keeping close to the Turko-Persian border for a considerable part of the journey. But even there the mountain bandits might make the journey a dangerous one, for the Kurds—of whom there are many in Persia—are a constant menace to the traveler. And even assuming that he has passed through Persia in safety, his sudden advent in Van—where he is well-known as the missionary's friend might make him an object of hatred to the Moslems, who are determined to efface Christianity throughout Armenia. However, Mr. Howard is an experienced and prudent traveler, accustomed to danger, and he relies upon the protecting providence of God and upon his American citizenship for protection in his mission of mercy to the stricken people. Sent out as the almoner of a great multitude of Christians in America, he is entitled to an interest in the prayers of our readers for his safety and the success of his mission.

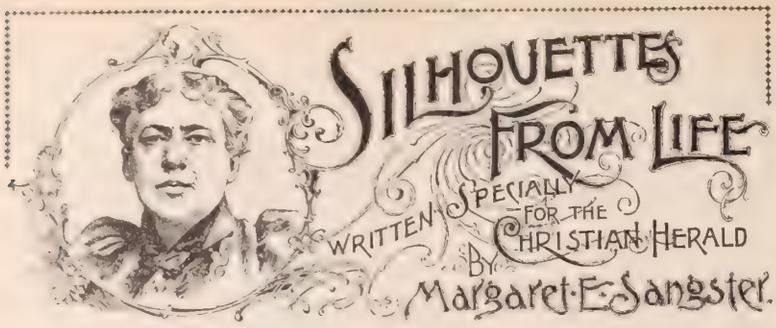
Rev. Henry O. Dwight, of the Bible House Mission in Constantinople, telegraphs that "Armenia is laid waste and a quarter of a million of souls are totally destitute." He urges instant action for the relief of the suffering in order to save human life, and adds that thousands can thus be saved who must otherwise perish. Dr. Dwight advises that humanitarian work be started generally throughout America for this charitable purpose. He is a man of excellent judgment and conservative in all his statements. He has been in the mission field there for over twenty years, and his cablegram possesses a significance that should not be overlooked by those who are hesitating about the real need of the Armenian Christians at the present time. A gift now will save life, whereas a month or even a week later the opportunity for such service may have passed away forever. During the week another remittance from the Armenian Relief Fund has been cabled by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It is hoped that the prompt liberality of contributors to the fund will enable us to make substantial weekly remittances while the urgent need lasts.

In the issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of Dec. 11th next, every contribution to the Armenian Relief Fund prior to Dec. 1st will be fully acknowledged, it being impossible in the present issue to devote sufficient space for that purpose.



Miss Maxwell's Thanksgiving.

MISS MAXWELL'S apartment on Central Park was one of the most sumptuous and beautifully appointed homes in New York. Inheriting wealth, and possessed of refined and cultivated taste, Miss Maxwell had travelled widely, and her rooms were filled with souvenirs of her loiterings in many lands. Soft, thick rugs covered the floors, rugs brought from Bagdad and Damascus; there were ivories carved in the most minute way by patient workers in India, where a man spends a life-time toiling on a box or a cabinet; there was china from the most famous potteries of Europe, and the pictures on the walls were from the finest artists in the world, while the lovely couches, chairs, and portieres, selected with fastidious regard to luxury, made the furnishing of Miss Maxwell's home a dream of delight.

"One must be very happy here!" thought the tired little maid who waited one afternoon while Miss Maxwell lifted from the dressmaker's big square box, the rich gown which had been sent her by Madame Celestine. The little maid took Miss Maxwell's money in settlement of the bill, and signed the receipt, and went back to her employer to carry other beautiful gowns home to other rich women. She was herself a little apprentice from the country, living with her sister, Madame Celestine's fitter, in a hall-room of a boarding-house, on a dingy and crowded down-town street. Every Sunday the two girls attended church as they had done at home, and so they often saw their gowns come walking down the aisle, and Ruth Elkins, next Sunday watched for Miss Maxwell's, and nudged her sister Martha when it, with Miss Maxwell inside its folds of cloth, fur, silk and lace, was established all by itself, in her stately pew. This next Sunday followed Madame Celestine's busiest week of the fall, after Ruth had carried home many elegant "confections," designed by Doucet and Felix, and other Parisian autocrats in the world of fashion. Ruth and her sister were very plainly clad, and their jackets, though respectable, were thin for the season. Much of the girls' wages—and the fitter was well paid—went straight to the old folks on the farm, and the daughters were proud to economize and scrimp, for they were paying off the mortgage, bit by bit.

You might have searched the wide, busy town over, and in all New York found few lonelier people than Mary Maxwell, notwithstanding her wealth, and few more discontented and rebellious ones. The two sisters in an obscure corner under the gallery, had each other, and away off in Maine, of course, there were father and mother, and a half dozen other children to love and be loved by, but Miss Maxwell was the last of her family. Worse than that, she had nothing to do. Her lawyer managed her property, and she had neither business, nor work, nor any object to [illegible] and thought. Far from being happy amid her splendor, she was usually in the state of mind described as bored. And she never realized her dissatisfaction with things in general so much as when holidays came around.

It struck a false note in the common joy, this depressed mood of hers, which was becoming a habit, and robbing her face of its charm and sweetness.

The minister spoke eloquently of the duty of thanksgiving, and made his sermon very practical. "If you haven't kindred of your own," he said, "to sit around your table, do not forget that there is a brotherhood and sisterhood of humanity, larger and deeper and fuller in its claim on you than your own relations, your own clan and family, because God calls you to share your abundance with their poverty. Their want makes their appeal. Instead of growing narrow and sordid and selfish, let your benefactions flow out. Feed the hungry, clothe the naked, open wide the doors of your houses and take in those who are less plentifully endowed than you are, and let them share in your good gifts. Make somebody else's Thanksgiving an event, even if you have no special occasion yourself to provide a feast. God will reward you; he is a good paymaster."

"We will dine at two," said Miss Maxwell.

The earnest words thrilled Miss Maxwell. Her eyes lighted up with feeling. The pucker disappeared from her forehead. Her lips were firmly set. She walked out of church, with her head erect, but a manner more gracious than usual. A gentleman, whose seat in church was opposite hers, watched her with interest. They had once been close friends, but pride and misunderstanding had come between them, and of late their ways had been apart. Something Mr. Gordon discerned in her look this morning which made him say to himself, "Mary's better nature has awakened." He smiled when he saw her lay her daintily gloved hand on the sleeve of Ruth Elkins, at the porch. A glow rather than a smile grew in his face, as he heard her words, uttered in that low contralto voice which carries farther than others:

"Miss Elkins, I wish you would come and spend Thanksgiving Day with me, you and your sister. And if there are any of your friends who are not going home for the holiday, will you please ask them in my name, to join us at dinner? We will dine at two o'clock, and my table accommodates ten."

The Elkins girls looked bewildered, but could only accept and promise, and Miss Maxwell stepped into her coupe, and was driven home. She had, for the first time in many years, obeyed an impulse, and her heart felt softer than it had since she was a child. The stony heart had yielded its selfish unconcern and given up its stubborn will, and God, all in a moment, had given her in its stead a heart of flesh.

She was sitting by herself that Sunday afternoon in the lingering dusk, when the maid brought her a tiny card on a silver saiver. Mr. Hugh Gordon had called. A tide of warm blood rushed to Miss Maxwell's face, receding to leave her pale as a camelia, and as fair. "Ask Mr. Gordon to come to the library," she said, rising and advancing to receive him as a moment later he entered through the heavy velvet portieres.

"Polly," he began the instant her little hand lay in his, "you are going to make a Thanksgiving for those girls; I heard your sweet invitation. Now, my darling, my own, only love, make a blessed Thanksgiving for me as well. I am cold and hungry and lonely, too. I have been so ever since we were parted. Take me back, beloved, and let us keep our Thanksgiving together as plighted wife and husband."

"Hugh!" exclaimed Miss Maxwell, "how precipitate you are. How imperious! What can I say but yes? Oh! why did you not take this tone ages ago, and overcome my opposition by your resolute siege?"

"Because, Polly, I never was allowed a glimpse of the real woman, much as I loved her, till this morning, when I saw her in sweet sisterhood touch the hand of one of God's poor."

Thanksgiving Day dawned in a beauty beyond a painter's power to describe. Blue skys, soft airs, late chrysanthemums in the garden, and Miss Maxwell's house a bower of roses. Roses banked on the mantels, and garlanding the mirrors, palms standing in the halls, vines twisted around the balustrades. The ten guests, all working girls, to whom a day in such a mansion on a friendly footing was a rare treat, wandered from room to room, enjoying all that they saw, and resting, every sense satisfied. Then came dinner, a dinner of iced oysters on the half-shell, clear soup, golden-browned turkey, chicken-pie, plum-pudding, and ice cream. The hostess ate l[illegible]tle, but she pressed her guests to partake freely of the delicate viands, and in h[illegible] gown of creamy white satin, edged wi[illegible]fur, she looked like a queen.

Dinner was over at last. From the [illegible]cove beyond the library floated sounds [illegible]silvery music, and presently, the hoste[illegible] having disappeared, one girl whispered [illegible] another, "The wedding march!" And [illegible] a moment from the far end of the lo[illegible] room came Miss Maxwell in bridal v[illegible] and flowers, and by her side walked a t[illegible] splendid man, and the clergyman seem[illegible] to rise out of the ground like a spirit, b[illegible] really he came from a reception-room l[illegible] hind a screen of palms, and then and th[illegible] the simple marriage ceremony went [illegible] and Mary Maxwell was Mrs. Hugh Gord[illegible]

The Gordons are as happy as youth a[illegible] love and the fear of God can make two p[illegible] ple, who are using their wealth as Go[illegible] stewards, who must render an account [illegible] what they do with the talents committ[illegible] to them. And every month the girls w[illegible] were their wedding guests spend an ev[illegible] ing of delight in Mrs. Gordon's beauti[illegible] home. MARGARET E. SANGSTER

A SCHOOL IN "CHINATOWN."

The Morning Star Mission in New York Conducting a Foreign Mission at Home—Mr. Fung Y. Mow's Diligent Pupils—The Five Points Chinese Work.

EVERY passing year witnesses an increase of the vast and numerous agencies in operation for the spread of the Gospel at home and abroad. It also brings an increase in the numbers of those who desire to consecrate themselves to such service. While it is impracticable for all who desire to become missionaries to go to the foreign field, there are fortunately unlimited opportunities for mission work at home. Indeed, in not a few of our great cities, with their populations composed of many nationalities, it has become possible to engage in what is, to all intents and purposes, foreign mission work, the sole difference being that it is conducted here, instead of abroad, and that instead of inhospitable climates, antagonistic governments and fanatical heathen or savage mobs, we have the wholesome air, the free, enlightened government of our own land of liberty and the warm friendship and approval of its people for such work. Here are representatives of almost every nation under the sun, not the least numerous or interesting among them being the Chinese, who have settled in considerable-sized colonies East and West, perhaps more than 100,000 being distributed throughout the country. Most of them have come here with the laudable purpose of gaining, by their labor, a present livelihood, and of saving a sum, which in China will be sufficient to enable them to spend their old age in comfort. They come here idolaters and heathen, knowing not the true God, but worshipping a multitude of spirits and practicing many heathen rites in the privacy of their "joss-houses," as they call their temples. Their highest morality is found in the teachings of Confucius, but of that eminent heathen philosopher, probably not one in a thousand of the Chinese who come here has ever heard, for the average Mongol immigrant is usually a laborer of the Chinese sea-coast cities, a coolie from Shanghai, or a worker in the fields. Inheriting all the ignorance, together with the superstitions and traditions of his own people, and speaking a strange and difficult language, the Chinese immidly has more obstacles to contend with han any other class of foreigners arriving on our shores. But, unlike the stolid Mussulman or the Hindu, he is rarely indifferent to kindness or the influences of eligious teaching. He quickly recognizes he value of an acquaintance with the lanuage of the country and, there are nowhere to be found more eager or industrius pupils than those that assemble in the Chinese schools of New York City for the urpose of acquiring the three fundamenal "r's" of a plain American education. is a proud day indeed for the Chinese upil when he can master a simple sentence n English, write a legible note in the ame language, and figure up his wages or is savings in plain numerals instead of reorting to the bewildering mass of hierolyphics that compose the chirography of he Chinese.

On the first page of this issue of THE HRISTIAN HERALD is presented the fourth f our new series of colored illustrations. shows an evening session of a Chinese hool, whose pupils assemble in a comrtable little hall in Doyer Street, New ork. They are taught by a young Chinaan, Fung Y. Mow, who, being fairly edcated in the language and ideas of his dopted country, has undertaken to aid in lightening his fellow-countrymen. The hool has been established in connection ith the Morning Star Mission which be in its work among the Chinese residents New York nearly three years ago, unr the auspices of the American Baptist ome Mission Society. Its plan of work is milar to that of the Baptist Mission hools on the Pacific coast. Religious inruction is imparted through the Chinese nguage rather than the English, as the achings of Christianity can thus be made earer to the Chinese mind; but there are at all the Baptist Chinese Missions classes under competent teachers for the education of the pupils in English.

No. 17 Doyer street, New York, when the school shown in the picture is held is a build devoted to the work of the Mission. Miss E. C. Potter is Superintendent and Miss Helen F. Clark and other ladies are also actively interested in its conduct. In addition to the exclusively Chinese work, Miss Potter every Tuesday has sewing-classes at which young Italians, Chinese, and girls of every nationality are taught the use of the needle, and the lessons of the Gospel together, just as godly Mrs. Jamal is teaching her class of poor Syrian girls in Jerusalem. All the teachers except those conducting the sewing-classes are men.

"Chinatown" in New York is not a very extensive section, covering only a few blocks at most and the majority of its denizens being crowded into three of those blocks. There are probably about 3,000 Chinese in the city, and these may be divided into two classes, viz.: merchants, (some of them peddlers, others small shop-keepers), and gamblers. It is only just to say that the larger number are well-behaved and should be included in the first classification. There is no more industrious person in the busy metropolis than the average Celestial. On Sundays the normal population is greatly increased by arrivals from out-of-town. The streets of Chinatown are then crowded and the interiors of the buildings are usually densely packed with visitors from many points in New Jersey, Connecticut, Long Island, Staten Island, and upper New York. Sunday, therefore, is the "field day" for missionary work and the soul-winners of the Morning Star Mission make it a day of unusual activity. For the purpose of interesting Chinatown and its visiting population in the progress of the educational and mission work, the conductors of the mission publish a little leaflet called The Chinese News, of which Fung Y. Mow is editor and which gives a brief translation of the week's events in China and a concise presentation of some Gospel truth—the whole presented in Chinese characters. Of course, it contains a programme of the Mission's work and a cordial invitation to all readers to attend.

A pleasant feature of the work is that the Chinese invariably treat the missionaries with kindness and accord them a hearty reception wherever they go. Even the gamblers will pause in their calling to accept a copy of the little paper and talk a moment with the visitors. And when they promise to attend the Mission meetings they seldom fail to keep their pledge, the result being that all the services are fairly well attended. The work on Sunday consists of an Italian Sunday School, at 3 P. M., Chinese Bible Class at 3.30, and a Young Men's Christian Association Prayer Meeting at 5 o'clock. There is also a Sunday School at 6.30 for the Chinese women and children of the neighborhood—Mr. Richardson being in charge. Mr. Mow conducts a service in Chinese at 8 o'clock. The monthly attendance at the various meetings averages 2000, and would doubtless be much larger if the mission had more commodious quarters. There are four English-speaking teachers and several Chinese teachers actively connected with the Mission. The Mission Hall (which is shown in our colored illustration, the same room being used for both teaching and preaching), is on the third floor of the Doyer street house, and runs practically the entire length of the floor. It is plainly furnished, and the ladies of the Mission have made it attractive by hanging on walls and beams a number of pretty, varicolored Chinese fans, lanterns, and umbrellas, which, when the room is comfortably crowded with intelligent-looking young Chinamen, give it quite an Oriental aspect, and especially when the bright young Chinese teacher is on the platform explaining the Gospel to his brothers, or on week-day evenings instructing them in the use and significance of the English characters. There are blackboards ranged alongside, for instruction in writing and ciphering, and in the course of an evening's lesson, many a student puzzles over the same problems on those blackboards that have vexed American school-boys at a much more tender age. Our artist has pictured faithfully from the life a scene at one of those educational sessions, at a moment when the young teacher is explaining to the class the meaning of some unusually difficult word or phrase in the tongue they are all striving so earnestly to master. Experience has shown that the Chinese who come to America, and especially the younger element, are surprisingly receptive.

Among the needs of the Morning Star Mission is a dispensary, with an American doctor in charge. The conductors of the Mission hope that some one interested in the work will be induced to help the Mission to open a free Dispensary in the early future. The Mission is supported by the Baptist Home Missionary Society, assisted by the Baptist Society of New London, Conn. As the Chinese are very poor, they can give little towards its support.

One of the most successful educational and missionary efforts among the Chinese in New York has been that conducted for many years past by the Five Points Mission. In his report of this work Mr. Barnard gives this outline of its history and its progress:

Besides the secular teaching, the class gathered on Sundays at the House of Industry and read from the Bible. They procured from the Bible Society a Chinese Testament, and Choy Awah would read and translate parts of it for them. One evening they asked him to read the fifth chapter of Matthew. His translation of the first verse was: 'Plenty people, whole lot: Jesu he go up side mountain, sit down.' He wanted to give his idea of the word "disciples," and stood a moment trying to think how to express it. Then the thought came to him, and he said, 'Me come your school, me be your boy,' Could anyone have illustrated the meaning better than that? He expressed his idea of heaven by call it the 'top side of sky.' When he came to the ninth verse, 'Blessed are the peace-makers; for they shall be called the children of God,' he stopped a moment, hardly knowing how to give in English the latter part of the verse. He said at first, 'Me no talkey English;' but finally, looking up with a smile and lifting his hand, said, 'Go up, up top side of sky; sit down by Emperor and be Emperor's son.' It was a most beautiful conception of the idea of a child of God.

Choy's translation of the parable of the prodigal son was very interesting. In as near the exact words as possible it was as follows:

"A man he two sons. Son speak he to father; father got money; give some he; father he take it all right. I just now give you half. He give him half; he go long way—like me come China to New York. No be careful of money, use too much; money all gone; he very hungry. He went to man. He want work, he say; all right; he tell him feed pigs. He give pigs beans; he eat with pigs himself. He just now talk, "My father he rich man—too much money. What for my stay here hungry? I want go back and see my father. I say to him, I very bad. He knows I bad. Emperor (God) see I bad. No be son, me be coolie." He go back; long way, father see him. He take him on the neck. The son say, "I very bad. I just now no be your son; I coolie." His father talkey to boy, and say, "Get handsome coat; give he ring; give he shoes; bring fat cow—kill him; give him to eat." They very glad. He all same dead; just now come back alive: he lost; he get back. Number one son come. He hear music, he tell servant, "What for they make music?" He says, "Your brother come back; your father very glad he no sick; he kill fat cow. Number one son very angry; he no go inside; very angry. Father he come out; he say, "No, no be angry." Number one son, he say, "I stay all time by father; never make him angry. My father never kill one fat cow for me. My brother be very bad, he use money too much; he have fat cow and music." Father say, "You no understand; he just dead; he now come to life; he lost, he now come back." They make music. In describing the meeting of the father and the eldest son, Choy came up to us, and putting his hand on our shoulder, said in a soothing tone "No, no get angry."

Choy finally became a student in Howard University, Washington, D. C. His story is only an isolated instance of the effects produced by education and the Gospel in the hands of a large number of young Chinese pupils through the efforts of the Five Points House of Industry, and its faithful missionaries.

There are several other Chinese Mission Schools or classes in New York, notably the Presbyterian Chinese Mission and the Methodist Chinese Mission, an excellent work being conducted at both places.

AN INSURGENT MILITARY OUTPOST NEAR REMEDIOS, CUBA.

The Cuban War.

NOTWITHSTANDING the great military efforts made by the Spanish government during the past six months to subjugate the Cuban insurgents, the latter seem to be as strong and resolute as ever. There have been frequent engagements, each side in turn sustaining reverses or securing victories, but General Campos, although his army has been repeatedly reinforced from Spain, has not been able to tempt or force the Cubans to a general engagement under such conditions as he, with the skill of an old campaigner, is steadily seeking. He has now probably 60,000 of Spain's best troops in the field but their great numerical strength is more than counterbalanced by the very large number of prostrations from yellow fever, and other climatic causes. On the other hand the Cubans, who fight guerilla-fashion instead of in masses, have nothing whatever to fear from the climate which is deadly only to the foreigner—not the native. At the present outlook, there is little expectation of the war reaching a close this year. Our illustration shows a Cuban military outpost in the interior of the island. These troops—most of whom are excellent marksmen and now fairly well equipped—are probably the advance of some formidable insurgent force and are in a position to reconnoitre successfully and keep their main body informed of the movements of the enemy. The insurgents, numerically much inferior to the enemy and not nearly so well armed, are compelled to fight as guerilla, and it is by adopting this method of warfare that nearly all their victories against the trained troops of Spain have been won.

Thanksgiving Day.

AS this gladsome season comes we are apt to recall the olden time Thanksgiving dinner. Father at one end of the table, mother at the other end, the children between, wondering if father will ever get done carving the turkey. Oh, that proud, strutting hero of the barnyard, upside down, his plumes gone and minus his gobble. Stuffed with that which he can never digest! The day before at school, we had learned that Greece was south of Turkey, bnt at that table we found that turkey was bounded by grease. The brown surface waiting for the fork to plunge astride the breast-bone, and with knife sharpened on the jambs of the fireplace, lay bare the folds of white meat. Give to the boy disposed to be sentimental the heart. Give to the one disposed to music the drumstick. Give to the one disposed to theological discussion the "parson's nose." Then the pies! For the most part a lost art. What mince pies, in which you had all confidence, fashioned from all rich ingredients, instead of miscellaneous leavings which are only a sort of glorified hash! Not mince pies with profound mysteries of origin! But mother made them, chopped the meat for them, spiced them, sweetened them, flavored them, and laid the lower crust and the upper crust, with here and there a puncture by the fork to let you look through the light and flaky substance into the substance beneath. No brandy, for old folks were stout for temperance. Dear me! What a pie! You deluded New Englanders can talk till you are gray about your pumpkin pies for Thanksgiving Day; give me an old-fashioned New Jersey mince pie. Of the ten at that table all are gone save two—some in village church-yard, some in city cemetery—but we shall sit with them yet at a brighter banquet.

The Ancestral Hobby.

PRIDE of ancestry is with many a leading mania. Now we believe in royal blood. It is a grand thing to have the right kind of kindred. There is but little chance for one badly born. If we belonged to some families that we know of, we would be tempted at once to give ourselves up to the police. But while far from despising family blood, we deplore the fact that so many depend entirely upon heraldry. They have not been in your company a minute before they begin to tell you who their father was and their mother. The greatest honor that ever happened to them was that of having been born. It is a congratulation that there was but one mechanic in their line, and he helped build the first steamboat. They were no possible relation to one Simon, the tanner. The only disgraceful thing in their line, so far back as they can trace it, was that their first parents in Paradise were gardeners. There was a big pile of money somewhere back, a coat of arms, and several fine carriages. They feel sorry for Adam, because he had no grandfather. To hear them talk you would suppose that the past was crowded with their great progenitors, who were lords, dukes, comrades of Wellington, accustomed to slapping George Washington on the shoulder, calling him by the first name; "hail fellow, well met" with Thomas Jefferson. As if it had taken ten generations of great folks to produce one such Smythe. He is no relation to Smith. That family spell their name differently. But you find that in the last seventeen hundred years there were several breaks in the broadcloth. Do not say anything about their Uncle George. He was a blacksmith. Nor ask about Cousin Rachel. Miserable thing! She is in the poorhouse. Nor inquire about his grandfather's politics. Nor ask what became of his eldest brother. But all this is nothing, so long as they spell Smith with a y in the middle and an e at the end. They have always moved in the circle of the Rittenhouses, and the Minturns, and the Grinnells, and the Vanderbilts. They talk much of their silver plate to everybody save the assessor. In the year 1700 they had an ancestor that rode in the carriage with a duchess.

But we are all proud. We slept one night at the West, in the rustic house of President Fillmore's father, in the very bed occupied the week before by Daniel Webster and the President. We felt that we must carry off from that room a memento. Not able to get anything more significant, we brought away from the peg in the room, one of old Mrs. Fillmore's cap-strings. It was with no ordinary emotions that, after coming down into every-day life, we displayed the trophy. Still how distasteful is the companionship of one who is always on the subject of his high associations and honored ancestry. We get vexed, and almost wish that their ancestors had been childless. At proper times and to proper degree let such themes be discussed, but what a folly to be on all occasions displaying Mrs. Fillmore's cap-strings! It is an outrageous case of cruelty to animals when a man persists in having all his progenitors join him in riding the ancestral hobby.

Honest and Dishonest Work.

SOMETIMES a man who seems to succeed is at every step a failure. There is more lawful fraud committed than unlawful. Penitentiaries and the Court of "Oyer and Terminer," are for those clumsy rogues who do not know how to steal. The purloining of one cabbage ends in the "Tombs," but the absconding with one hundred thousand dollars wins a castle on the Rhine. So you see that men get into jail not because they steal, but because they do not steal enough. There are estates gathering that have not within them one honest dollar.

But the general rule is that moral success is worldly success. It is easier to make a permanent fortune in honorable ways than by dishonorable conduct. The devil is a poor financier. When the gold and the silver were laid down in the earth, they were sworn to serve the cause of righteousness, and they never go into the coffers of the dishonest without committing perjury. There is an honest work for everyone to do. Lawful enterprise in the long run will declare larger dividends than dishonest scheming. The oil company of which Hon. Bogus Greaseback is President, and Hocus Pocus, Esq., is Secretary, at first declares twenty per cent., then ten per cent. afterward three per cent, and, last of all, nothing, leaving the widows and orphans to play the beautiful game of "Money! money! who has the money!" But fraudulent estates do not average a continuance of more than five years. Occasionally, an old man, having gathered large property by ignoble means, may die in its possession, bequeathing it to his heirs; but when the boys get it, what with their wine, and what with their fast horses—how they will make it fly!

OUR MAIL-BAG.

Inquirer. Please state through THE MAIL-BAG where one can send money for the Mont Lawn Children's Home? I have read so much about the poor little waifs, that my heart yearns to help them, and my little mite may keep some poor little one on the road to Christ if I knew where to send it.

Any contributions intended in aid of the Children's Home at Mont-Lawn, sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD now, will be applied to the work when the Home re-opens next spring.

C. C. If a person has done a wrong and confesses that wrong and sincerely repents, and knows that God has forgiven, should that sin, in years after, be brought up against him in anger, to prove him unworthy of confidence?

It should not, and no one claiming to be a Christian can find justification for taunting a repentant and forgiven brother with his sin. What God has forgiven we, who also stand in need of forgiveness, should be satiisfied to regard as blotted out. The Apostle Paul gave explicit directions how a brother was to be treated after repentance. (See Gal. 6: 1; II. Cor. 2: 6, 7.)

Reader. Is it right for one to take a brother away from home who will not work and spends his evenings out late doing evil, and put him in the army (where my husband now is) and where he can earn money and a living? Would I be causing him and his parents more sin to do so?

It depends altogether on the circumstances of the case. We do not think it would be right to do so without consulting the parents. Besides, there are many other and better ways of helping a young man besides inducing him to take up the life of a soldier, which in many cases renders the man unfit for any other vocation in life.

Constant Reader, Rahway, N. J. 1. Why was Satan permitted to tempt our first parents? 2. Who is the man of sin referred to by Paul in II. Thess. 2: 3, 4?

1. Hundreds of volumes have been written on the subject without reaching any credible solution. The question is wholly speculative. It is the fact as revealed that you have to accept, if you believe the Bible account. 2. The man of sin is believed to be an incarnation of Satan, who will appear and attain power in the last seven years of this dispensation. Some commentators have thought that the Popes of Rome fulfil the prophecy, but some of the characteristics of the man of sin do not apply to any pope who has yet appeared.

Earnest Inquirer, Mattoon, Ill. If a person who does not feel that he is a child of God, yet who does not lead a worldly life and is conscious of being changed from a former life of sin cannot get assurance of salvation, must he conclude that God has no mercy for him?

No, that would be dishonoring God, by assuming that he does not mean what he has said. Assurance is not necessary to salvation. It is simply one of the evidences of faith. It is Christ who saves. The feelings are often misleading. If a person accepts the offer of salvation through Christ and trusts implicitly and exclusively in him, he will be saved. No man is saved because he feels this or that, but because Christ died for him. The best evidence of the reality of faith is love for Christ and for men and an earnest desire and effort to live like Christ, holy and pure.

X. F. Y., Virginia. If a man who has wasted his property in drinking, opium smoking, etc., but has given liberally to churches and has attended church regularly, leaves the remainder of his property at death to religious or benevolent organizations, will not God have pity on him and save his soul?

If you mean to ask whether in consideration of his legacy, God will accept him, we must answer in the negative. No man can buy salvation with a legacy. Neither will church attendance avail him. If he sincerely repents of his sin and quits it and goes to God in prayer, asking for pardon, for Christ's sake, he will obtain it. Nothing else will avail to save him. While he is living in sin and not seeking to be delivered from that there is no hope. Many people want to keep their sins and be saved from the consequences of them, but God does not make any bargains of that kind.

Constant Reader, Dover, N. J. How is it possible to reconcile the repeated statements in the New Testament such as John 1: 18; 14: 9; 5: 38, etc., that no man had seen God, or could see him and live, with the numerous passages in the Old Testament such as Gen. 32: 30; Ex. 24: 11; 33: 20, etc.), stating that Moses, Manoah and others saw God and spoke with him?

We are told that God is a spirit and he is therefore invisible to mortal eyes. All that we read of his revelations leads us to believe that he assumed a form for the purpose of communication with the Old Testament saints. That form they saw, but God himself they could never see. In the same way the very writers who declare that God could not be seen, were well aware that they had seen him in Christ. In a very solemn manner Jesus told them that they who had seen him had seen the Father. Yet even in him the glory of God was vailed by his flesh; but there was such a manifestation of his presence as a human being could bear to see and no more. The Old Testament writers doubtless believed that they saw God, but in the New Testament light it was realized that God could not be seen, being a spirit.

L. Rowe, Plainfield, Ia., E. G., West Nyack, N. Y., and others. Is the direction as to baptism you quoted some weeks ago to be found in the Bible? If not is it binding on Christians?

It is not in the Bible, but as we then stated in the Didache, or "Teaching of the Apostles." The manuscript was discoved about twelve years ago by Philoletheos Bryennios. It has been examined by the most eminent Biblical scholars, who with few exceptions believe it to be genuine. Its author is unknown, and various dates have been assigned to it. The earliest is A. D. 80. It is evidently a manual prepared for the use of the early churches, and purports to be in the most condensed form a summary of the teachings of the Apostles. The writer does not appear to have read the Gospels of either Mark or John. Its authority is simply the writer's report of Apostolic teaching and practice. It is impossible to define its validity in the absence of any knowledge as to the writer.

Constant Reader, N .Y. Will a Christian, who has studied and cultivated his mind here upon earth, be any further advanced in heaven than if he had not, or does the difference in mentality of a Christian here on earth make any difference in heaven?

Yes, to both queries. All that has been revealed to us concerning the other life, justifies the conviction that it is a state of vastly enlarged activities and uninterrupted progress. There the spiritual life, which has been kindled in the soul while here, will find amplest room for expansion, and all those noble qualities of heart and mind that go to the formation of the best type of character here below, and which are elementary forms of the perfect manhood, will doubtless survive after our spiritual enlargement, since they have a close affinity to the spiritual life. To efface all intellectual culture at the outset in the next life is as great an improbability as would be the effacement of individuality. Consequently one who while on earth has cultivated the nobler faculties, will begin the heavenly life with a greater advantage than if he had made no such progress here.

F. V. Folly, Village, N. S. 1 Are all parts of the Book of Job to be accepted as true and inspired? 2. Were horses in use in Palestine before Solomon's time, and could one be used by the homicide in getting to the City of Refuge?

1. Your question is answered in the book itself. God is represented as saying (Job. 42: 7) of the speeches of three friends, "Ye have not spoken of me the thing that is right." Their speeches therefore cannot be regarded as wholly true. They misrepresented God in talking with Job. The problem to be discussed was how it was that extraordinary misfortunes had fallen upon so excellent a man. The reader is let into the secret in the beginning. He knows that the good man is being tried, to see if he does, as Satan says, serve God only because it pays to do so. God allows him to be tested to prove that he would be just as faithful in adversity as in prosperity. Job and his three friends do not know about this test, and they are puzzled. It is obvious that where they differ so decidedly all cannot be right, 2. Horses are mentioned in Joshua 11: 9. They appear to have been used chiefly for war. The homicide would be safe, and could claim fair trial if he once entered the City of Refuge, no matter how he got there.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

The Paris Railroad Disaster.

A STARTLING railroad disaster occurred in the French capital recently, at the terminus of the Western Railway. A train from Brittany entered the terminus, which fronts on the busy street called the Place de Rennes. The engineer apparently depended on his brakes for stopping the train at the proper platform and did not shut off steam until he entered the depot. There was some defect in the machinery for operating the brakes, which prevented their working. The momentum of the train carried it through the depot and with terrific force against the stationary buffers at the end of the tracks. They checked the course of the train but failed to stop it. The locomotive swept them away and went on over the wreck to the glass gallery at the street-end of the terminus, passed through it and leaped into the street below. The gallery was thirty feet above the pavement, and when the locomotive fell, it alighted on its front with its six wheels free of the ground. The tender carrying the coal followed it, but its fall was checked by the rear end of the locomotive on which it rested. Happily the rear of the tender was jammed so tightly against the front of the building as to form an effectual barrier to the passenger-cars attached to it and they came to a standstill. Over a hundred persons were in the cars and some of them must have been killed if the cars had followed the locomotive through the front of the building into the street. As it was they were severely shaken and bruised by the sudden stop, but none of them were killed. The only life lost was that of a woman in the street below, who was hit and instantly killed by one of the stones driven out of the wall of the terminus by the locomotive. Even the engineer and fireman escaped. They jumped from the locomotive before it took its terrible leap into the street. It is marvelous that more lives were not sacrificed, but at four o'clock in the afternoon, the time when the accident took place, the Place de Rennes is less frequented than it is at an earlier or later hour. Had it occurred at almost any other time, the locomotive would have crashed into a crowd of people with appalling results. If the engineer continues to run trains he is little likely to have another accident of the kind. His own narrow escape from death and from causing the death of many others, will probably teach him to put less confidence in the power of the brakes. It would be well if the same lesson were learned in morals. Numbers of young men embark on evil courses with perfect confidence that they have sufficient moral strength to stop when they find themselves in danger. But the moral strength slips, like the brakes in this instance, to fail at the critical time when the peril is imminent and they fall to rise no more.

He that trusteth in his own heart is a fool: but whoso walketh wisely, shall be delivered. (Prov. 28:26.)

To Utilize the Tides.

A writer in the North American Review makes a suggestion of a surprising kind. Referring to the proposal of the Niagara Falls Power Company to run a line to New York, over which they could send a current of two hundred thousand horse power, he asks why the money that such an enterprise would cost should not be used in a better way. He contends that there is enough power in the tides of the East and North Rivers to generate all the electricity that is needed to light both New York and Brooklyn and propel all the surface cars in the two cities. The plant necessary to collect and store the electrical product from this mighty force would cost an enormous sum, but it would not be more than the cost of a conduit from Niagara to New York. The rush of the waters through the narrow inlets of the bays and rivers is so tremendous that huge machinery could be operated by it, if a way of applying it were devised. At present no use is made of the vast energy, while immense sums are spent annually in producing less power than is now running to waste. There is similar negligence in spiritual matters. The elaborate and costly appliances for church work, for making the services attractive and for raising funds to erect costly buildings are to be found everywhere, while the mighty force the Saviour recommended and urged upon his followers is seldom used.

If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you. (Matt. 17:20.)

A Flight for Life.

In his reminiscences of frontier life published in the current number of a popular magazine, Gen. Miles describes the thrilling experience of a Captain in his command. The Captain was stationed at Fort Harker, Kans., on the route between Fort Riley and Denver. He was sent on a journey of inspection about thirty miles from the fort, and was expected to return before night-fall. He was, however, delayed longer than he anticipated, and did not start on his ride back to the fort until 4 o'clock in the afternoon. He had ridden about ten miles before darkness set in, and was expecting an uneventful journey, when the howl of a wolf startled him. His horse, a strong, spirited animal trembled vioently. Looking back he saw three prairie, or Lobo, wolves following him in the distance. He quickened his pace, but they gained upon him, and at the end of about two miles were but a few yards in his rear, and several others had joined them. He had only a revolver in the way of arms, and about fifty cartridges with him. He turned on his horse and fired at the foremost wolf. The beast dropped and the others set upon him and tore him to pieces. The delay gave the Captain a few hundred yards' start, but the wolves speedily overtook him, and their numbers had increased. The danger was by this time very serious. He carefully husbanded his ammunition, firing only when he could take aim deliberately. The wolves came so close that several times the horse's rear and flanks were cut, before a shot from the Captain's revolver created a diversion in the pursuing pack. Only four cartridges remained when the Captain reached the bank of the river opposite the fort, and his horse was so exhausted by its wild career that it staggered and fell dead on the river bank. The Captain plunged into the stream, waded across, and reached the fort in safety. He was weak and faint from excitement and his desperate exertions, but profoundly thankful to have escaped the fangs of the cruel beasts that had followed him for twenty miles. So a man struggles to escape from enemies whose ferocity he understands. Many who are assailed from the fierce temptations of life, would escape, too, if they were as much in earnest as he. But unhappily, though spiritual enemies are more dangerous than wild beasts, seeing that it is eternal life they would rob us of, they are often unopposed.

Ye have not yet resisted unto blood striving against sin. Heb. 12:4.

Electrocution for Weeds.

The purposes to which electricity is now applied seem almost endless in variety. One of the latest is as an agent for the destruction of weeds. It has been proved that when a sufficient current of electricity has been communicated to grass and herbage, it instantly withers and kills the plant. Railroad companies have already utilized the idea by arranging a hanging device, which projects from the car and destroys the grass and weeds on the banks, with which it makes contact. Prof. Woodworth, who has brought this new labor-saving method to the notice of the Natural History Society, says he does not see why this mode of exterminating weeds cannot be used to advantage on our country roads. He believes that electricity is quite as cheap as salt for the killing of weeds, in the long run, as it is much more prompt and effective, and destroys the plant to the root. He proposes to experiment on the most noxious weeds by taking a wheelbarrow or wagon supplied with a storage battery, to the land to be cleared, and let the hanging wires drag along the ground. He insists that even the stubborn agricultural pests, the Russia and Canada thistles may be exterminated in this way. It can, of course, be applied only when it is desired to have bare land, as the electricity will destroy the good plants as readily as the poisonous ones. It is so with all natural agencies. They cannot discriminate between the evil and the good. Some of our efforts at social and moral reform operate in the same way. As Christ taught, the only effective and discriminating separation will come at the last, when God gives to his angels the command:

Gather the tares and bind them in bundles to burn them, but gather the wheat unto my barn. (Matt. 13:30.)

THE RAILROAD ACCIDENT AT THE MONT PARNASSE STATION IN PARIS.

The Great Fires.

Circulars of warning have recently been issued by the State Forestry Commission of Pennsylvania, in the hope of decreasing the number of forest fires. It appears that over a million dollars are lost in the State every year by the destruction of trees. The circulars say that fires were then raging in seven counties, and that the previous week a thousand acres on Welsh Mountain had been completely denuded of timber by a fire. The Commission had investigated the origin of a large number of these fires and found that in every case the disaster might have been prevented. In some instances the woods had been set on fire purposely by men who had been expelled for the non-payment of rent or taxes. In others the fire had originated in the carelessness of hunters, who had thrown away a burning match among the dry underwood. A large number of fires had also been caused by sparks from the bonfires lighted by boys, who had not intended to do injury and did not know the danger of what they were doing. The Commission declares that in every instance that had been investigated, the cause of the disaster was one of those three, and that if it was possible to eliminate malice, carelessness and ignorance in relation to the fires there would be no more of these disasters. Costly as the forest fires are, they are but a small part of the calamities the same three evils produce in the world. But there is no hope of their being eliminated until men realize that education, which may remove carelessness and ignorance, is not sufficient to cure malice. Only the grace of God operating on the human heart is able to do that.

For we also were aforetime foolish . . . living in malice and envy. . . . but according to his mercy he saved us through the renewing of the Holy Ghost. (Titus 3:3-5.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Mr. Rockefeller has Added Three Millions to his donations to Chicago University, one million is given unconditionally, and two millions on condition that a like amount is raised in other quarters. This makes five and a half millions which Mr. Rockefeller has given to the University.

The Genealogy of Intemperance is Thus tersely and forcibly stated by Rev. F. M. Ellis, D.D.: "The saloon begets the drunkard, the drunkard begets drunkenness, and drunkenness begets the whole shameless progeny of crime and squalor under which society staggers to-day.

The Vacancy on the International Sunday School Lesson Committee caused by the death of Dr. John A. Broadus, has been filled by the appointment of Dr. John R. Sampey, Professor of Hebrew in the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary. The Committee at its recent meeting in Montreal, passed resolutions expressing sorrow at the death of its honored member.

The New York Bible Society During the past twelve months has distributed 86,311 copies of the Bible and the Testament, of which 56,030 were given to newly arrived immigrants. In order that each might have a Bible in his own tongue it was necessary to have Bibles in twenty-five different languages. The German Bibles were most in demand, Swedes next, and English third.

Ex-President Harrison Speaking at the Great missionary meeting in Carnegie Music Hall, New York, on Nov. 15, said that with due deference to the learned theologians then on the platform, he would like to give an exegesis of a certain passage of Scripture. He only wished to remind the audience that the Apostle's injunction to "hold fast that which is good," referred to doctrines, not to money.

It is reported that France has offered to release ex-Consul Waller as an act of courtesy to the United States. Mr. Waller, who has been unjustly imprisoned and outrageously treated, declared some time ago that he would never accept freedom on those terms. It is hoped that the next Secretary of State we have, will compel France to apologize and pay an indemnity to this much-injured man. If Mr. Waller had been a citizen of a great European nation France would have had to do this long ago.

The sudden death of Rev. Samuel F. Smith, D. D., author of "My Country 'tis of Thee," has caused sorrow in a multitude of homes throughout the land. Dr. Smith died Nov. 16 in Boston, Mass. He was on his way to Hyde Park, where he had promised to preach on the following day, when he was taken ill suddenly. He was taken to the Emergency Hospital, where all that could be done to save his life was done, but without avail. He died soon after reaching the hospital. He was eighty-seven years of age.

In a Recent Diocesan Address, Referring to the subject of church fairs, the Archbishop of York said, he firmly believed that notwithstanding the large amounts of money which were sometimes obtained by such incongruous means, the church was ultimately the loser rather than the gainer. At its best such a proceeding was a poor and undesirable substitute for the systematic offering up to God of some definite portions of their worldly substance to assist in the maintenance and extension of the work of his church.

Mr. William E. Curtis, of the Chicago Record, who has been travelling in Japan, has this to say, as a secular journalist, speaking of the work of missionaries from his own observation: "They have been the pioneers of civilization in Japan and have exercised an almost incredible influence upon the social, moral, political and industrial revolutions that have been going on during the last twenty-five years." At the same time he admits his belief that the missionary societies show a lack of judgment and often great indiscretion in sending incompetent men and women into that field.

Rev. Jacob Freshman, D. D., the Pioneer Christian worker among the Jews of New York and founder of the Hebrew Christian Church in St. Mark's Place, preached in New York, on Nov. 17 morning and evening, at the Eighteenth Street M. E. Church to large congregations. Dr. Freshman has been laboring at Newark, N. J., as pastor of the North Park Presbyterian Church, but he has resigned the pastorate of that church and expects to reside in New York until he is called to another sphere of labor. Churches needing a supply, or wishing to hear lectures on Palestine, may communicate with Dr. Freshman at Station O., New York City

The Family and Home Circle

Winter on the Prairies.

The Lonely Life of the Indian—Childhood on the Plains—Seasons of Joy and Mourning

MANY are the the reasons for thankfulness at this season, on the part of Uncle Sam's numerous family, and in every part of this Union, there is the note of joyful preparation for the home festival which takes place to-morrow. Even in lone prairie cabins, Thanksgiving is not forgotten. So universal has the observance of the day become that the Indian wards of our government have learned to recognize in the annual return of Thanksgiving Day an occasion for the expression of gratitude to the Great Father for all his goodness to the red men as well as to the white, and in many a tent and dug-out the same spirit prevails that was present when the chief Massassoit and his braves took the first Thanksgiving dinner with the Pilgrim Fathers. From the chimneys of the white settlers' rude homes in many a lonely section of our Northern and Western States, there rises the smoke of the same kindly festival, which is to most of them the happiest day of the whole year. In hundreds of homes in Kansas and Nebraska, where crop failure and famine made last year one of pinching want, the comparatively good results of their husbandry this year will afford cause for keeping Thanksgiving Day with happy hearts.

AN INDIAN PRAIRIE GRAVE.

No one who has not lived, for a short time at least, in the Indian country, can form any idea of the loneliness of winter life on the plains. Great bleak, bare, wind-swept areas, with frigid temperature and frequent storms of rain or snow, make existence a very monotonous thing. Yet the Indian and his family are philosophical, and with a modest supply of provisions and enough blankets to keep out the cold; with fodder for his horses and fuel for fires, he cares little for thermometer or barometer.

Our illustrations present two aspects of Indian life on the prairies that are not unfamiliar to those who have sojourned among them. The family group shown in one of the pictures is such as may be seen in almost any Indian encampment along the line of the Atlantic and Pacific or Southern Pacific Railroads, in California, Oregon, or New Mexico. They are warmly clad to resist the wintry cold, and in their stockaded camps, and heavy tents are probably as comfortable as possible under the circumstances. The other picture is that of a lonely grave on the prairie. Exposure of the dead is practiced by a few Indian tribes. The body is wrapped in blankets and after the ceremonial peculiar to the red men on such occasions, is taken to a distant spot on the plain and placed upon a rude platform of poles, firmly secured and too lofty for wild animals to reach. There the dead is left and the strange burial-place is never touched even by enemies of the tribe. As the atmosphere is dry and searching the body gradually becomes dessicated, every particle of moisture disappearing, and this process continues until there is nothing left of it but the bony skeleton covered with a skin like parchment.

It is a strange sight for the traveler, unaccustomed to such scenes, to visit, within easy distance of such sad reminders of man's mortality, an Indian camp on the occasion of some festivity or rejoicing, when all its members, from youngest to oldest, are engaged in merrymaking. Even the Indian, like all God's children in every state of life, has his share of sunshine and gladness.

"Provoke not your Children."

Unrestrained masculine goodness tends to become hard, needing the caution: "Fathers, provoke not your children to wrath;" rouse not in them a bitter sense of harshness and severity. The son, young though he be, has in him the manly temper, which inclines to rebellion, and the indications of this make the father only the more unrelenting. An ever-widening breach is opening between the two. Alas for both if it is left to widen with the advancing years! But, here is one who dearly loves them both, and would give her life for either, and whom they both almost adore. She goes and draws the little boy into her loving arms, talks to him kindly and tenderly, lets him unburden his heart of some its pent-up complaints, but tells the little fellow how that father loves him, and only desires his good; mentions some of the fatherly kindnesses that are yet fresh in the boy's memory, and when the young heart is tender, leads him to see his own fault and be sorry for his own wrong, and desirous to "be good." Then she finds a chance to tell the father how sorry Robby is; how good he has been all day; and to mention some kind, brave doings that go to the father's heart. So, when father and son meet, they can look into each other's eyes with no condemnation on the one side, nor defiance on the other.

A Boy's Evening Hours.

"Boys have no business to be out at night," is the common remark of many who have had wide observation and experience in worldly affairs. Parents who allow their sons to spend their evenings as they please, ignore the teachings of experience and part company with good judgment in permitting their boys to form such a habit. It is this habit which has started many a boy on a downward career. A leading business man says; "in my view of the matter, the seeds of evil are oftenest sown in early life. In the absence of employment boys are brought into temptation by staying away from their homes during times of idleness or relaxation, and perhaps frequently in the evening with doubtful companions after the duties of the day are over. And it is during these evening hours that the tempter takes his time to scatter the seeds that so frequently bring the fruit of death."

Cultivate the Child's Memory.

It is possible to begin to cultivate the memory as soon as a child can talk, when it should be made to describe everything it has seen during its morning walk, or to repeat some little story that has been told to it, or a short lesson which has been learned. Every teacher before beginning a new lesson should make sure that the lesson of the day before has been retained and understood, for the more we overcrowd the little brain in the attempt to force knowledge upon it the less we impress upon it for future use. It is the experience of all those who have crammed for examinations that as soon as the examination is over the undigested knowledge passes away and similarly through life. Unless an item of knowledge is assimilated it becomes as useless to the mental system as an undigested article of food to the bodily system, and in both cases they act as an irritant, interfering with the proper digestion of other matters.

Punishing Children.

When a parent punishes a child only in love, and without being ruffled by anger, the child is readier to perceive the justice of the punishment, and is under no temptation to resent passion with passion. A child who had been told by her father, that if she did a certain thing he must punish her for it, came to him, on his return home, and informed him that she had transgressed in the thing forbidden. He expressed sincere regret for this. "But you said, papa, that you would punish me for it," she added. "Yes, my dear child, and I must keep my word," was his answer. Then he told her just why he must punish her. Looking up into his face with tearful trust, she said: "You don't like to punish me,—do you, papa?" "Indeed I don't, my darling," he said, in earnestness. "It hurts you more than it hurts me,—doesn't it, papa?" was her sympathetic quettion, as if she were more troubled for her father than for herself. "Yes, indeed it does, my darling child," was his loving rejoinder. As a rule, a child ought not to be punished except for an offense that, at the time of its committal, was known by the child to be an offense deserving of punishment. And if a child understands, when he does a wrong, that he must expect a fixed punishment as its penalty, there is little danger of his feeling that his parent is unjust in administering that punishment; and, certainly, there is no need of the parent hastening to administer that punishment while still angry at the childish offence.

Thanksgiving.

ASSEMBLE, all ye people,
Your thankful voices raise,
To God, the Lord of harvest,
Whose goodness crowns our days;
Our fathers trusted in him.
And ne'er were put to shame.—
Of us he hath been mindful,
All glory to his name.

O God, we praise and thank thee,
The Giver of all good,
For health and strength and raiment,
For home, for friends, for food;
For peace with neighboring nations,
For missionary zeal;
We thank thee that in Jesus
Thou didst thyself reveal.

Not only do we thank thee
For joys thou dost bestow,
We bless thee, O our Father,
For trial, grief, and woe;
It is through tribulation
Thou winnowest thy grain;
O Lord, we pray thee, cleanse us
From every earthly stain.

And when, at last, thou comest
To gather in thy wheat,
May we with holy gladness
The Lord of harvest greet;
Then, when the last sheaf's garnered,
We'll celebrate thy love
At the Thanksgiving Supper
Of Harvest-home above.

Thanksgiving Day Thoughts.

IN every American home, and especially in every Christian home, there are abundant reasons for thanksgiving, if we only search them out. But amid our own jubilation, don't let us forget others. The poor should be remembered it would be a sad Thanksgiving, indeed, for many of the unfortunate ones of the world if God's people were to forget them. If you have a sufficiency in your own larder and to spare, don't fail to see that some one, less happily situated, is supplied from your abundance. It will make your Thanksgiving all the sweeter the children's laughter all the merrier, when you think of it.

How will you celebrate the day? Here is what a very good old pastor advises on this subject: We ought to go to church, if possible (and it ought to be possible always on Thanksgiving Day), give praise to God, hear his Word taught, return home, and have a good family reunion, with a pleasant dinner, etc. Is this all? No, we ought to remember the poor and send portions both of food and clothing to the needy. We shall the better enjoy our own blessings by considering that we have shared them with the poor "who shall never cease out of the land," "who are always with us." Very well. Is this all? No, on that day we ought to remember the millions of heathen in other lands who have no Thanksgiving Day, know nothing of the true God whom we thank, and by whose providence we live and they live, and especially that they have never heard of Jesus, the Son of God who came into the world to save sinners. Ought we not to remember them on Thanksgiving Day? How long would we continue to enjoy the inexpressible blessings of peace and order, and of all the blessings that are created and fostered by a Christian civilization, if the Bible, the Sabbath, the Gospel, were at once and forever taken from us! Not very long. And then we can also remember the poor persecuted Christians in Armenia—nearly a quarter of a million of them in the direst want, as one of the Consuls has just reported. A dollar to the Armenian Fund will keep more than one poor home less family in that distant land. They may not receive it in time for your celebration, but it will be your Thanksgiving tribute, all the same.

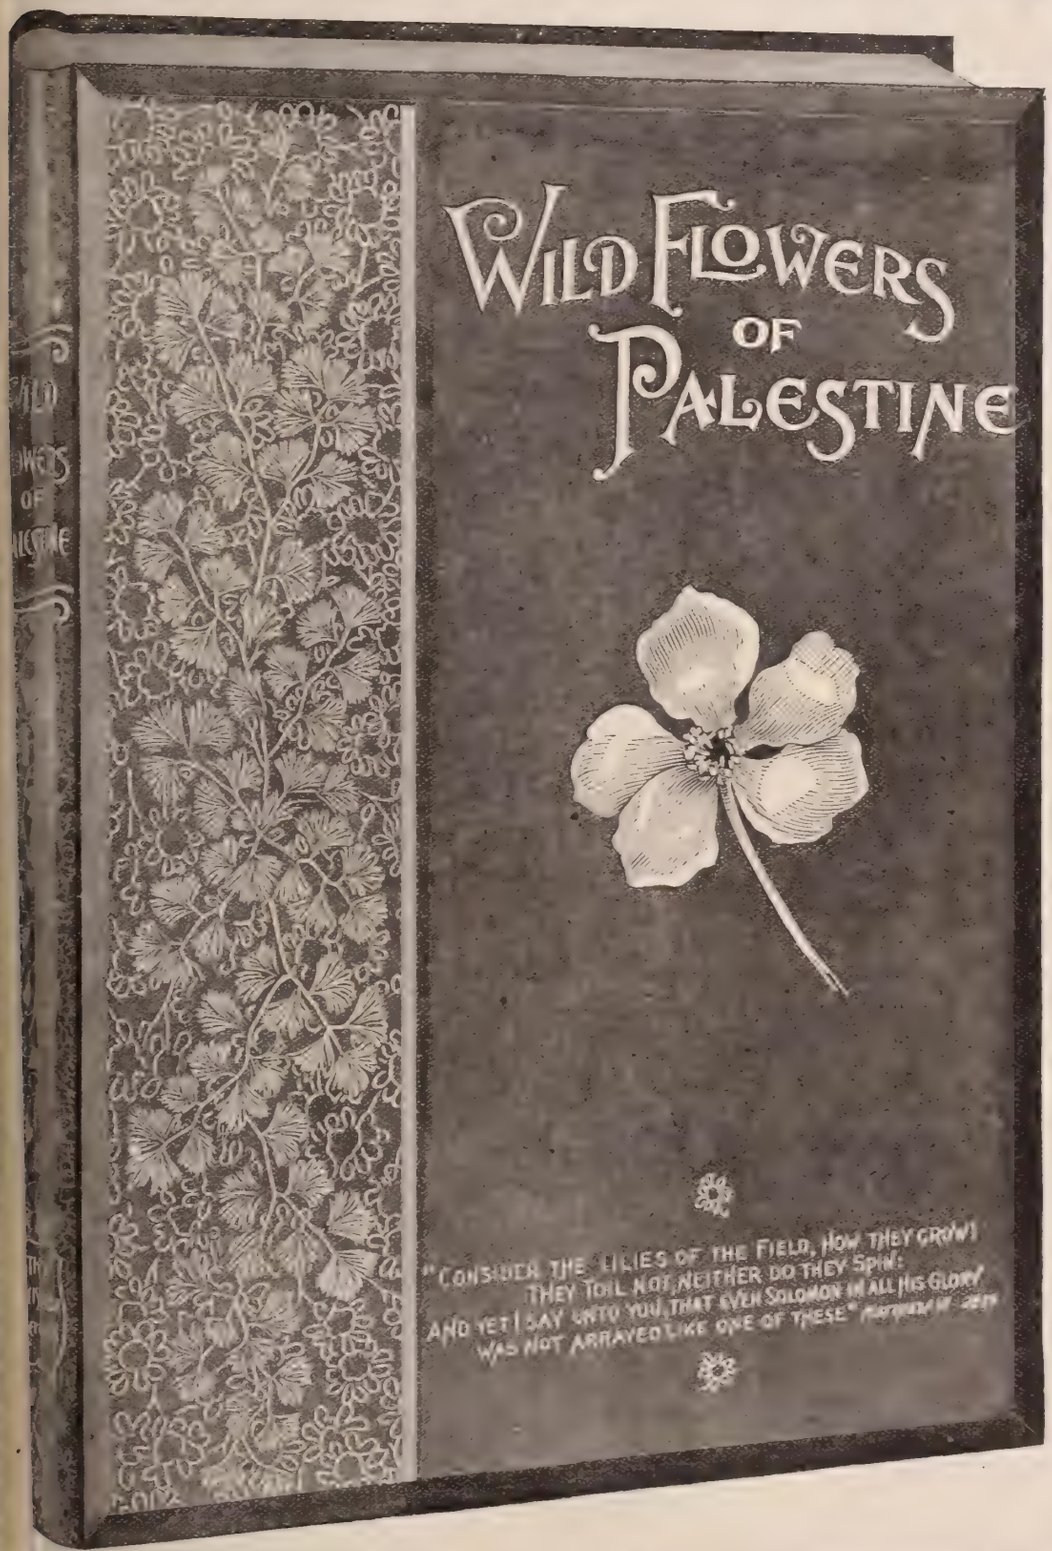
Real Holy Land Flowers.

An Exceptional Opportunity Presented Exclusively to Our Own Subscribers. Not a Copy of this Unique Holy Land Floral Souvenir to be Sold to any but Regular Subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

OUR Subscribers will be delighted to learn that we have a rich surprise in store for them, and exclusively for them, if they quickly signify their willingness to be thus favored. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, through Rev. H. B. Greene, B. A., has made in Palestine a varied and beautiful collection of flowers, whose value is enriched by Bible associations, and has pressed, preserved, and bound them in album form. In many instances the NATURAL AROMA of these flowers, several kinds of which have been gathered on Mt. Olivet, has been retained. These Albums are not only VERY HANDSOME, but their value is beyond estimation. Dr. Talmage, who has seen them, writes:



WILD FLOWERS OF PALESTINE
"CONSIDER THE LILIES OF THE FIELD, HOW THEY GROW! THEY TOIL NOT, NEITHER DO THEY SPIN: AND YET I SAY UNTO YOU, THAT EVEN SOLOMON IN ALL HIS GLORY WAS NOT ARRAYED LIKE ONE OF THESE."

You have all seen maps of Palestine, and heard sermons about Palestine, and sung hymns about Palestine, and longed for the opportunity of seeing Palestine, but this may be the first time you have ever held a part of Palestine in your hand. These are not pictures of flowers; any engraver or painter can give you them, but these were wrought, and spun, and colored by the hand of God. The ancestors of these flowers were touched by Moses, and Solomon, and Paul, and Christ. Through most of the year the Holy Land is all ablush with floral opulence. You find all the royal family of flowers there, some that you supposed indigenous to the far North, and others indigenous to the far South—the daisy and hyacinth, crocus and anemone, tulip and water-lily, geranium and ranunculus, mignonette and sweet marjoram. In the collection at Beyrout you may see eighteen hundred kinds of Holy Land flowers; while among trees are the oak of frozen climes, and the tamarisk of the tropics, walnut and willow, ivy and hawthorne, ash and elder, pine and sycamore.

Oh, the flowers! They are the angels of the grass. They all have voices. When the clouds speak, they thunder; when the whirlwinds speak, they shriek; when the cataracts speak, they roar; but when the flowers speak, they always whisper. Take this floral album to some quiet place and listen. Some of the flowers have different names now from those with which they were baptized in Bible times, but the change of name does not change their beauty, or aroma, or suggestiveness. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot do a lovelier thing than to put this Divine bouquet into the hands of its friends and patrons. The flower marks the exact line between the material world and the spiritual world. Heaven and earth meet at the white pillar of the calla lily. T. De Witt Talmage

The contents are as follows:

Frontispiece—The Cedars of Lebanon.
Introduction by Rev. Dr. Talmage.

The Flora of Palestine—by Rev. H. B. Greene.
Wild Flowers of Palestine—(Illustrated.)
Fifteen Depressed openings containing as many and more beautiful specimens of Real Palestine Flowers.

These Floral Albums are ready for immediate delivery. They will not be advertised among outsiders, and only those subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who act very promptly will have an opportunity of securing one. There are hardly enough of these Floral Albums now left to supply more than one in ninety of our subscribers, and it is absolutely out of the question to have any more made up, as no flowers can be gathered in Palestine for this purpose before next spring. The Album is bound in rich olive silk cloth, solid gold edges, with gold side and back stamp and a very attractive emblematic design on the cover.

A Tale of the Russian Steppes.*

BY OLIVER M. NORRIS.

THE PEASANTS SURPRISE SERGEI IN HIS GARDEN.

CHAPTER XXII.

Sergei as Villager.

IN Slavo, things speedily settled down after the war into their ordinary work-a-day groove; they were not politicians there, and were content if they could sow their grain and reap their harvest in peace, no man making them afraid.

Sergei soon discovered that the General declined to take him into his confidence; indeed he seemed in every possible way to avoid seeing him. At nightfall, or very early in the morning, he could be seen feebly pacing along the walk in front of the house supported by Grisha, but after a few minntes they would both disappear again. Yakov and Marfa waited on them, and kept Sergei informed of anything that happened out of the common.

Sergei, now rapidly gaining strength, soon felt that he could no longer remain in his uncle's house. With an ever-increasing desire for work among the villagers, he felt that he must live with them, be one of them, and enter fully and wholeheartedly into their ways of life and thought. So he left his uncle's house, and went to live with the Uriadnik until he could finish building a cottage for himself on a plot of land he had bought outside the village. He and Mikhail expended a lot of pains on drawing plans for this house. It was to serve as a model for the whole country side. There were two large airy rooms, and a little kitchen, and all sorts of cupboards and a store room. It was built in the simplest way, and with the cheapest materials. And then the garden. Sergei labored like a slave at it, morning, noon and night. Their harvesting over for the day, the villagers would flock around to see the Panitch work in his garden, and Sergei, his coat and cap off, his hair and great tawny beard dripping, would explain to them what he was doing, and they would all talk together and discuss it. Before Sergei had been gardening a week there was not a man in Slavo who was not delving and hoeing in his own little plot, sowing winter seeds presented by Sergei, removing rubbish, fencing, tidying up all round.

But Sergei's best work was done in the winter that followed. The aged man who filled the post of village schoolmaster had become too old for the duty and he expressed a wish to retire. To the astonishment of the villagers, Sergei undertook to teach the school himself. He had the big room newly whitewashed and sent for a case of new books from Kief with a lathe and some carpenter's tools. The news that the Panitch was ready to begin teaching brought every boy and girl in the village to the school and Sergei had more than he could do. Mikhail came to help and between them the teaching was done. Not books only, but carpentering, leather-work, basket-making, and other useful arts were taught and for the first time in Slavo there was real education to be had.

It was surprising in how short a time the two reformers began to see signs of reformation. Haim Rosenberg's successor saw his occupation almost gone. The schoolroom and the big room in Sergei's izba were filled night after night with eager crowds of learners.

Sergei at last found himself filling the role of village reformer. He began to know the peasants with unsurpassable insight into their lives and character. He became one of them in his soul, in his sympathies. He had heard and read all about the mighty ones of earth, their state, ambition, pride; but it was only in the lives of the peasantry that he saw what was really great and beautiful, what was tragic and heroic; he now saw also that beautiful ideas were none the less lovely because they are of lowly origin, and dressed in homely garb.

Mikhail nobly aided him with his own peculiar gifts. It was Mikhail's ambition to seek to lift his neighbors from the sin and soil of time to the eternal light on which his own strong eyes were so steadily fixed. He was himself a man purified by the study of truth and by constant work, and he came to feel as he never felt before that work is prayer, that human life to be purified must pass through the dust and disfigurement of earthly toil.

All this time the General in his privacy heard occasional echoes of what was going on in the village. Although latterly he had been the willing companion of Grisha in many of his frenzied acts, he had never completely lost the balance of the man of affairs, of the man who understood the world. He made frequent inquiries as to the work and felt, somehow, a growing interest in it all. The gradually darkening cloud of increasing pain and ever-failing health that hung over him was a sore trial. He clung to life with a passionate love, and his frenzied and continuous appeals to heaven for restored health were terrible manifestations, if any, alas! were needed, of the Nemesis that waits on the last years of an ill-spent life.

Gladly would Sergei have paid him filial attentions but the old man shrank from him and sought religious help from Grisha. But Sergei could pray for him and one day, hearing that as a last resort a famous doctor had been summoned from Kief to advise, Sergei asked Father Ambrose, Mikhail and a few friends to meet at his house and pray for the aged man. The General heard of the meeting and while they were at prayer he amazed them by staggering into the room. He thanked them for their interest in him and was about to say something more, when utterance failed him. He turned half round toward Sergei, swayed unsteadily and fell prostrate. They raised him and found that he was dead.

Grisha had followed him to the meeting and he bent over him when he fell. His clouded mind seemed to realize what had occurred and with a low cry he bounded away from the house. He was never seen again. A few days afterward a herd-boy brought into Slavo the Icon and the old tattered Book of Ordeal. He had found them on the edge of the quicksands. Then the people knew the end of Grisha. He had perished in that treacherous place.

CHAPTER XXIII.

The New Regime.

The General's death and Grisha's mysterious disappearance caused much excitement of course, and were the theme of many a long evening's talk round the big wall-stoves in the cottages of Slavo. But as time went on the life of the village resumed its usual course, the events of that night of the general's death became history, and none the less history because in a few short months they became inextricably entangled with myth and legend. Were any chance traveler to visit Slavo today, and ask for an authentic account of what happened on that winter's evening he would hear a stranger tale than any the reader knows.

July came round again with all its ripeness and color, and the people of Slavo looked out on their yellowing oceans of corn, and felt that quiet contentment was truly a blessed state. Or they stood at their cottage doors, and looked at their tall flaunting sunflowers and many another flower that now ornamented their gardens, at their bright green garden railings, the neat paths, the white walls, the trim little farmyards, and could hardly realize that in one short year their village had been transformed.

Who would succeed the General in the ownership of Slavo? That was the question all were asking with the utmost anxiety. Would it be the beloved Sergei or the hated and dreaded Vladimir? Every one knew that it was Vladimir the General had loved and there was a general fear that he would be the new lord. But questioning was turned into amazement when it was learned that the General had sold Slavo some time before his death and that it was not his to leave. He had sold it and during the last few months of his life had remained in possession only by the kindness of the purchaser. And who then was the owner? It was the Countess Olga.

One day toward the end of harvest when all the village was busy in the fields the Countess came to take possession. She was accompanied by a fair-haired lady who looked around her with keen interest and whom the Countess treated with sisterly deference. They were received by old Yakov and Marfa who had grown old in the General's service and were now wondering if they would lose their places.

"I'm your new mistress," said the Countess in response to Yakov's obsequious welcome, "and this is my friend. I've come to see the house, and if you and Marfa—Marfa, come and shake hands—would just show us into a room where we might sit down a little, we would wait while you get the samovar ready for tea."

"And are you the Countess?" broke in Marfa. "Well, I am glad." She looked a moment steadily at the fair-haired lady, and her eyes grew big with wonder. "Well, I declare! If you are not white Nadja of the ferry, I'm surely blind or dreaming." And seeing Nadja smile she sprang at her and kissed her again and again.

The old servitors stood gazing and smiling, but all at once recollecting themselves bowed low again, showed the new-comers to a room and bustled away to get tea in a state of happy excitement such as they had never known before in all their lives.

The bubbling samovar was soon on the table, and a delightful spread of the best that Marfa could provide — eggs, and cream, and butter, and white bread, and honey.

"We'll stop her[e] to-night, Marfa," s[ays] Olga, "and you'll get a room ready for [her]. Tell the coachman. And as soon as t[he] people come home from the steppe will y[ou] tell Yakov to walk down to the villa[ge] and ask Panitch Sergei if he would [not] mind coming up to see us for a little. A[nd] if you'll get two or three glasses w[e] gather some of those flowers and try [to] brighten up this dingy room. Wh[en] Panitch comes you must have some supp[er] ready."

As the sun sank the two women wat[ch]ing out over the cornfields saw the labor[ers] come home in groups. At first they w[ere] so far away that their faces and figu[res] could not be distinquished, but as th[ey] came nearer Olga knew that that fo[ur] towering above the rest, dressed in wh[ite] with the great hat over his tanned f[ace] and flowing beard must be Sergei; a[nd] Nadja knew—Nadja knew them all, [for] her eyes lingered on the tall, slight [fig]ure who walked with Sergei, and looked fr[om] time to time smilingly in his face. Na[dja] sighed as she thought of what might ha[ve] been, and Olga heard her sigh and to[ok] her hand.

The evening wore on, and up ca[me] Yakov to announce that Panitch had [ar]rived. The two women rose to rece[ive] their guest, and there was no need [for] phrases of welcome from the hostess. H[is] sparkling eyes and heightened color [on] cheek and neck showed her joy.

They talked far into the night. Th[ey] spoke of old memories of childhood, scenes [of] the war, Sergei's reforms, Mikhail's wo[rk] the Countess's plans for the future. Th[en] Nadja rose, and begged to be allowed to [re]tire. Marfa and Yakov went off with her [to] show her her room and to have a t[alk] with her about old times. Olga complain[ed] of the heat, and threw back the lace sc[arf] that covered her head and shoulders. S[he] turned half round, and left her seat [to] move to the low wall along the terra[ce] Sergei rose and stood beside her, and th[ey] looked across the sleeping village to [the] full moon rising, and hanging low and [red] over the misty river.

Sergei bent toward the slight fig[ure] standing by his side.

"Olga, when you left to go south [from] San Stefano you wrote that perhaps [we] would next meet under the arbor-vitae [in] the garden at Krasnaya Balka. We m[et] instead, here on the terrace at Slavo. I [had] thought for a moment that you were [with] other women——"

Sergei took her hand in onc of his, [and] with the other he stroked her hair. S[he] drew closer, and up stole a slender [arm] round Sergei's neck.

"If I thought you were as other wom[en] I would not speak to you, Olga, a[nd] now speak. But you think all the more [of] me because I am a village teacher and m[ind] my own corn. Olga, you know how [I] love you. Surely your heart told you t[his] long ago."

But Olga did not answer him w[ith] words. She buried her face in his brea[st] and gently loosening her other hand fr[om] his grasp it went to clasp its fellow rou[nd] his neck. Sergei's two strong hands ca[me] softly down on the shining hair, and r[ais]ing the beautiful face from its shelter [he] kissed the closed eyes and the parted li[ps].

"Olga, at last!"

Her eyes opened, and she looked up [at] her lover with a light in her face th[at] thrilled him.

"At last," she whispered.

It was difficult at first to say whether Sergei and his wife lived more at Krasna[ya] Balka or at Slavo; but in time they finally arranged to settle in Krasnaya Balk[a]. Nadja was Olga's representative in the v[il]lage; and Mikhail continued his work [in] Slavo, and managed his mother's far[m]. Mikhail often visited Nadja in the ev[en]ings, and would talk with her on sch[ool] management and other neutral subjec[ts].

He had long to wait, but he waited [pa]tiently, and finally had his reward. Th[ey] live in Slavo in the house built by Ser[gei] for himself.

TRIUMPHS IN HEATHENDOM.

Suggestions on the Christian Endeavor Topic for the Week Beginning Dec 8. Psalm 67.

WHEN Jesus stood on the high mountain and saw the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them, he must have felt the force of the temptation presented to him. He could not take them as a gift; he scorned the offer of them in that form; but they are becoming his by a nobler process. The temptation was thrust away, but not the hope of possession. His dominion is not one that can be given to him. The glory of his rule is that it is over subjects who choose him of themselves. He will not rule over slaves or captives but over free, intelligent men who voluntarily submit themselves to him. To win a throne by such means is a longer and more toilsome process than by conquest, but how much more glorious! Not long ago, a man was taunted with being of foreign birth. "I ought," he said, "to be honored here more than if I had been born on the soil. A citizenship that comes of birth, has no volition in it; but the citizenship of a man who voluntarily takes it upon himself, because he esteems its privileges and loves the principles of the constitution, is more intelligent and is likely to be more faithful in observance." So it is in Christ's kingdom. No man is born into it, but every one who is enrolled, is drawn by his love of the King and his conviction that there is no rule so wise, or beneficent. It is a profound belief in this principle that lies at the basis of all missionary activity. To so present the rule of Christ that men will take his yoke upon them is a work so glorious, that even an angel might long to engage in it.

The success that has attended it justifies all the money and labor that have been given to it. Millions of dollars have been spent in the work and a multitude of lives have been sacrificed in it; but it is not the missionary who loses heart. The men who stay at home and examine statistics are the men who question its utility. They count the converts and can tell us to a fraction how much each soul has cost. Yet the work at home does not compare with the work in heathen lands, for results. How many sermons does it take to convert a respectable sinner in a Christian land? How much labor is given in the home, in the Sunday School and in the pulpit to the conversion of the child of Christian parents? But our missionaries go abroad to peoples sunk in superstition, steeped in ignorance, blinded by race prejudices, met with ostracism and sometimes with physical suffering and martyrdom; and the sower becomes the reaper. With everything against them—tradition, patriotism, parental influence, difficulties of language and alien customs, they win converts. Still more, the work of education is begun, which prepares the way for a great harvest in the future. In China, India, Japan, Micronesia and through Africa the Gospel is being proclaimed and the results are uniform. Idols are abandoned, heathenism renounced and some come forward to take upon them the name of Christ. Whenever the story of the cross is told, no matter what soil the good seed is dropped into, there is fruit. Christ has been true to his promise and the word does not return to him void. A number that no man can count call Jesus, Lord. And these become Christ's servants in their turn. They go to their fellow-countrymen with the message they have received, and in their hands it has new power. With their knowledge of the language and the ways of the people, they can do better service than the missionary. So the work already done is pioneer work, and greater triumphs are to come.

CONFIDENCE.

THOUGH waves of sorrow round me roll
And surge about my trembling soul,
'Tis Jesus who my bark commands.
And while the helm is in his hands—
My Lord and King—
My soul in perfect peace doth sing.

Though all around seem going wrong,
He changes sadness into song;
And even in the darkest night
His presence makes my pathway bright.
While he is King—
My soul in perfect peace doth sing.

Though friends may fail when needed most,
In sons of men is not my boast;
I trust alone in Jesus' name,
To-day, for evermore the same.
Since he is King
My soul in perfect peace doth sing.

His plans I may not understand,
But still I know that nail-torn hand
Will guide aright, through joy or pain,
For he o'er all my life doth reign
As Lord and King—
And so in perfect peace I sing.

AFTER!

AFTER the storms of earth below
There is a calm eternal;
From every grief and sin and woe
A rest, a rest supernal.

After the bitter rain of tears,
The sadness and the sorrow,
There is a dawn of brighter years,
A glad, a glad to-morrow.

After the disappointments here
That earth has always given,
There is a blessed hope and cheer,
At last, at last in heaven.

After the journey dark and lone
Along death's awful river,
There is the brightness of the throne
Forever and forever.

FOR JESUS' SAKE.

THREE little words, but full of sweetest meaning,
Three little words the heart can scarcely hold,
Three little words, but on their import dwelling,
What tenderness of love do they unfold!

"For My sake" cheer the suffering, help the needy:
On earth this was My work; I give it thee;
If thou would'st follow in thy Master's footsteps,
Take thou and bear My cross and learn of Me.

"For My sake" let the harsh word die unuttered,
That trembles on the swift, impetuous tongue;
"For My sake" check the quick rebellious feeling
Which rises when thy brother does thee wrong.

"For My sake" press thou with all patience onward,
Although the race be hard, the battle long;
Within thy Father's house are many mansions,
There thine own voice shall join the victor's song.

And if in coming days the world revile thee,
If "for My sake" thou suffer pain and loss,
Bear on, faint heart, thy Master went before thee,
They only wear His crown who share His cross.

DUTIES OF THE LAST TIMES.

Directions in the Bible for the People who Live in the Latter Days.

BY THE REV. CANON HOARE.

IF we are truly looking forward to the Advent, that blessed hope of the Church, "the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ," if we reverently trust that it may not be very long ere it takes place, then it follows that we regard ourselves as occupying the position of men who are living in the latter days—men who may at any moment meet the Lord—men who are called upon to fulfil the duties peculiar to the latter days.

First, we want to be doing the work of the latter days. What is the great work of the latter days? I answer, without any hesitation, that there is one great work for the Church of God, pre-eminently peculiar to the latter days, and that great work is, the work of Missions. "This Gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come."

If we look for the Advent of our Lord Jesus Christ as the blessed consummation, then, brethren, it behooves us to do what we can to hasten that consummation, and throw our whole energy and strain every nerve, into the preaching of the Gospel, that is by missions.

If we are looking forward to "the glorious appearing of our great God, even our Saviour Jesus Christ," we must be prepared to watch against the dangers of the latter days. If we are to triumpth right on to the end, we must be fully prepared for seductive influences acting on our minds, and for influences working in our people's minds—unsettling, disturbing, and harassing. We must be prepared to see various combinations of error and seductive powers. not merely acting in a general way, but in one distinct shape, and in another distinct shape; and in a third distinct shape, and in every possible combination of the three, working together to prevent the establishment of the kingdom.

And now we come to the third point. We have not only to do do the work of the latter days, not only to watch against the seductions of the latter days, but also we are to be lifted up by that strong, bright glorious hope above the cares and anxieties of the latter days. I believe these latter days are to be full of care. There are to be political cares: "Nation shall rise against nation, "Wars and rumors of wars." There are to be commercial cares. Then physical cares: "Great earthquakes shall be in divers places, and famines, and pestilences." Then, again, there are religious cares; there are to be seducing spirits in the world, and in the midst of the Christian Church. Alas! as we look on the Church of Christ, our hearts are bowed down sometimes—I fear it is oftentimes—with all we see within it; the heresies, the divisions, the unbrotherliness of spirit, and the half-heartedness.

Now, I can understand people being sorely discouraged by all these things, but it must not be so with those who are looking for the Advent—they have been forewarned of all these things. Other men may have their "hearts failing for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth;" but if we know what is coming—and we reverently hope and believe that we do know what is coming, "for ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief in the night"—we shall not fear? Why not? Because we are looking for our blessed Lord, who himself said, "When these things begin to come to pass," we are not to wait till all these things are finished—"then look up and lift up your heads."

"THE TOWN PUMP."

And How its Name Was Changed, and it Became an Ornament to the Village of Cherryvale.

It was a balmy day in early September when Mr. and Mrs. Edward Wilmot, who had just arrived by the noon train from St. Louis, drove up in Judge Brewster's neat little trap at the gate that opened on the Judge's well-kept grounds. There was no finer house in all Cherryvale than Oak-Hill, where the Judge, who was a hale old gentleman in the sixties, kept bachelor's hall. A cordial welcome awaited the new arrivals, who after removing the traces of dust and travel, were soon seated in the cool dining-room whose windows commanded a spacious prospect of wood and meadow, beyond the sloping lawn, with a corner of the village street included in the view.

"I'm pleased to have you both at Oak-Hill," said the Judge, as he sat beside his guests. "It was kind of you to come down for a week or two to cheer an old fellow like me. I'll go bail for it, you won't find it lonely, though."

"No, indeed, uncle," said Mrs. Wilmot, smiling. "I often think of the happy days I have passed here when mamma was with us." And her face showed a trace of sadness.

"You're just like her, Flo'; just like her when she was your age," and his eyes were moist as he turned to look out of the window. Her mother had been his favorite sister, and his heart naturally went out to the beautiful young wife, whom he had known since her childhood.

"And now that you're here," he resumed, "I want you to make my house your home and to do just as you please—remember, just as you please. You, too, Edward," he added, turning brusquely to Mr. Wilmot, "I shall feel offended if you don't."

"I trust we may not take you at your word too literally altogether, uncle," said the young man, with a pleasant smile. "But we shall not be much indoors, for the natural beauties of Cherryvale were so obvious as we drove up from the station, that we shall probably want to cultivate a closer acquaintance by walks and drives."

"Yes, yes; it's a pretty place—pretty enough," was the Judge's response, "but even in this Eden some find cause for sorrow and discomfort. God grant you may never find them," he added earnestly.

"Well, dear uncle," said Mrs. Wilmot, "it's a pleasant thing to lighten another's burdens, if ever so little a bit, and maybe we can make use of our holiday in that way here. Don't you think we can?"

"Well, I don't know," was the musing reply. "You see it's this way. Up to some eighteen months ago, all the cases that came up here on court days were of a sort to be easily settled—such cases, you know, as come up in the ordinary rural village community. But now it's different since the tavern opened. The 'Red Lion' has done more to drag down the good name of Cherryvale, than all the other causes combined could have done in a dozen years."

"Too bad that the peace of the village should be invaded by the degrading traffic," remarked Mrs. Wilmot.

"I should say so," said the Judge testily. "The majority of our local court cases nowadays have their foundation in liquor and its been so ever since Dick Green was licensed to deal out liquid ruin to our young men."

The afternoon was passed in admiring the Judge's well-kept garden and orchard and in inspecting his stables. A team and carriage were placed at the exclusive service of the Wilmots, and they had the pleasure of a long drive the next day. Passing up the village street they observed the sign of the "Red Lion," swinging at a corner. A few paces off, leaning up against a lamp-post, stood a young man, his face dull and listless, his clothing untidy and his general attitude and appearance betokening that he had patronized the "Red Lion" bar.

At the post-office Mr. Wilmot alighted. After depositing his mail, he talked a moment with the postmaster, an old veteran who had seen service in the war and who, knowing everybody in Cherryvale, was regarded as a sort of village news gazette, since the place had no paper of its own. He accompanied Mr. Wilmot to the door.

"There," he said, looking up the street in the direction of the "Red Lion," "there's young Tad Stryker drunk ag'in, I do believe. That there young man is goin' to the dogs fast as legs 'll carry him. Pity; he'd make a first rate sojer, too."

"You know him, then?"

"I should think I did; who doesn't? Why, he's so well known 'round here they call him the 'Town Pump.' Fine name for a young man with respectable parents, isn't it? Poor old Zeb Stryker, his father's broken-hearted over his goin's on, I believe. Leastways they say he is."

"The Town Pump?" repeated his visitor, somewhat curiously.

"Edzackly, thet's it. They call him thet 'cause he's forever full—only it's whisky, instead o' water. Makes a big difference too. He was such a fine lad; such a promising lad was Tad. Well good-by, sir."

As Mr. Wilmot drove toward Oak Hill he related the incident to his wife. Little was said by either, but that afternoon he drove off alone in the direction of the "Red Lion." Entering the tavern, he found a little group of loungers, but the man he sought was not there. He enquired of the landlord.

"It's Tad you want?" said Green, interrogatively. "Well, he isn't around just now; prob'ly asleep somewheres about, though. He's always dozin' if he ain't drinkin'."

"Wait a minit and I'll engage to hunt him up, sir, if you care enuff about it," said a laborer setting down his glass. "You just wait inside."

Blear-eyed and wretched-looking, but comparatively sober, a figure approached the carriage a few minutes afterward. He was accompanied by the laborer who had volunteered his services to hunt him up.

"Thank you, my man," said Mr. Wilmot. "You have done me a service. Mr. Stryker, I want to make your acquaintance," he continued turning to the other. "My name is Wilmot. I would like to talk with you a little. Won't you jump in?"

"The man drew back, a surly expression on his features.

"What did you want o' me?" he asked suspiciously.

"Oh, nothing much, I assure you; but I can explain better if you come along. Believe me, I have driven down here especially to see you and I'm sure you don't wish to disappoint me. Come."

With an ill-grace, the man permitted himself to be placed in the seat, and as the horses started off, he demanded again, somewhat angrily, to know what was wanted. The door of the "Red Lion," Mr. Wilmot noticed, was crowded with the inquisitive loungers who were curious about the whole proceeding.

As the horses jogged slowly along Mr. Wilmot chatted pleasantly with his strange companion. He was a skilful conversationalist, and, little by little, the sullenness of the other gave way before his kindly talk. Not a word was said about the degraded associations of the "Red Lion," or the young man's own debasement through the drinking vice. He was addressed in all points precisely as though he were socially the equal of his companion, for Mr. Wilmot judged that, though Tad Stryker had already fallen to the level of the common drunkard, there must be some depth in his heart that could yet be touched by Christian kindness, and that self-respect, if it could be aroused, would help in the battle.

When they alighted at the Oak Hill gate, Tad Stryker halted, and faced Mr. Wilmot with some show of resolution.

"No, no," he said huskily, "I can't go in; it's no place for such as me, in there; the Jedge knows it. You've treated me nice, but——"

"Nonsense, Mr. Stryker," insisted Wilmot, placing a hand on his arm. "You have already promised, you know, and besides here is my wife coming to meet us. This is Mr. Stryker, my dear."

Mrs. Wilmot greeted him with a polite cordiality that at once removed any embarrassment. They entered the house and Wilmot conducted Tad to a toilet room, whence he emerged in a few minutes looking cleaner and more presentable. Judge Brewster was invisible.

That late afternoon and evening, Tad, to his own astonishment, stayed with the Wilmots. He was entertained by them as any respected guest might have been and after dinner found himself talking with them quite cheerfully about Cherryvale and its people.

When the brief evening service was held which was part of the daily lives of the Wilmots, Tad Stryker knelt, for the first time in years. No word of prayer escaped his own lips, but his heart almost stood still as he heard Edward Wilmot pleading before the throne of grace in his behalf. It was a simple, earnest petition that their guest might be led to know and to love Jesus as his Saviour and Friend, that he might be strengthened to resist temptation and to become a blessing to others. There were tears in his eyes as he rose from his knees and, stretching out his right hand to Mr. Wilmot, he said in low accents:

"Thank you, sir; I'll not forget that prayer—no never."

Mr. Wilmot saw him to the gate and watched him earnestly as he passed down the elm-shaded road that led to the village. "Oh, God!" he whispered, "save him by thy grace."

Eighteen months had passed away. It was early spring and the trees around Cherryvale were again beginning to put on their dress of living green and the blossoms were coming out in the garden at Oak Hill. Mrs. Wilmot had come to visit her uncle once more and her husband had written that he would join her there on Thursday, and the two would return to their own home the following Monday. He arrived in time for luncheon Thursday and was welcomed with more than the usual cordiality by the old Judge.

"That son of yours is a wonder, Ed," said Judge Brewster, as they all sat together in the parlor overlooking the front garden. The baby lay sweetly sleeping on a cushioned lounge.

"I hope he'll prove a good man like his godfather," was Mr. Wilmot's earnest answer. "You know, Judge, he must turn out well to satisfy Flo, whose idea it was to name him after you."

"God bless her heart!" exclaimed Judge Brewster. "By the way, Ed," he continued, turning abruptly, "we have invited some friends, Flo and I have, to spend the evening with us. And, come to think of it, there's just three of 'em, like yourselves, a young couple and a baby—isn't it Flo?" and he looked at her mysteriously.

Mrs. Wilmot smiled and stroked little Asa's hair, as he lay sleeping.

"Yes," she replied, "a real nice baby and a pretty name, too."

"And I expected to have you all to myself," said Mr. Wilmot.

The afternoon passed pleasantly. At seven-thirty a neat wagon drove up the road and stopped at Judge Brewster's gate. The new-comers were ushered into the cosy parlor by the servant-maid.

"Mr. Wilmot, let me present some good neighbors of mine, Mr. and Mrs. Stryker and son—my nephew, Mr. Wilmot," explained Judge Brewster, as he made the formal introduction. "Mrs. Wilmot has already had the pleasure of meeting them."

Mr. Wilmot bowed to the lady and the men shook hands. They looked into each other's eyes earnestly, a wistful, searching expression on Mr. Wilmot's face, while that of the other was wreathed in smiles. The ladies looked on as if awaiting developments, and Judge Brewster made a futile effort to appear unconcerned by attempting to chuck baby Stryker's double chin.

"Let me hold your hand just a moment, Mr. Wilmot," said the younger man. "I have wished and prayed for this opportunity to come. You cannot have forgotten the poor, drunken wretch you picked up and took to this house, right out of the 'Red Lion' Tavern?"

Light dawned upon Mr. Wilmot. "But surely it cannot be that you—yes, now I remember," he said slowly.

"Look at me, Mr. Wilmot," said the other. "I was a dissipated sot, a ne'er-do-well, a confirmed drunkard, without a friend in the world, when you held out a helping hand to save me. 'The Town-Pump' they called me, you may remember; that was the name I got, and I deserved it, too. Your kindness and that of your good wife that day by God's grace was the means of my salvation. I shall never forget your prayer that night; it has been with me every hour of these two years. That prayer was answered, Mr. Wilmot, for the last drop of liquor had passed my lips that day."

"Thank God!" said Mr. Wilmot, earnestly.

"But that's not all," he continued. "Years ago I learned to love a young girl, and would have made her my wife, but I fell, and all was over between us. Since I began the new life all blessings have flowed in upon me, and her love returned. She is here—my wife—Nelly, and the baby."

"He's named after you, Wilmot," interpolated the Judge; "a brave little rascal, he is." And he poked again at the chubby dimple.

It was a happy party that gathered around Judge Brewster's bachelor dinner-table that evening. Across that hospitable board was told with a hearty emotion and a deep thankfulness the whole story of Tad Stryker's reformation. His change, dating from that evening at Oak Hill, had taken Cherryvale by surprise at first, and the loungers at the Red Lion sneered, and prophesied that "it wouldn't last." But, strengthened by the memory of Wilmot's prayer, and imbued with earnest resolve, Tad had fought the battle bravely. A hard battle, and often well-nigh lost, but that prayer, repeated by his own trembling lips, always strengthened him at the crisis. At last the calm followed the tempest, and he felt in his heart that the prayer had been accepted. Thenceforth, for him, the Red Lion held no temptations. He had even helped to rescue two of his old drinking-mates there from the fate that had once threatened himself—the fate of the common sot. Living soberly, he gained friends one by one, for there were many good men and women in Cherryvale who heartily hated the tavern and its traffic, and were glad to help Tad in his brave fight back to respectability and honor. It had been a stiff battle, but it was won at last, and the Cherryvale folks all hailed the wonderful change which had transformed the once besotted "Town Pump" into a sober, earnest Christian citizen, a promising business man, and a happy husband.

Five Thanksgivings.*

BY THE REV. J. H. C. McKINNEY.

IT has occurred to me that it would not be inappropriate to remind you of a few things for which we, as American citizens, should be thankful:

1. The faith of Columbus. To this child of Providence "faith was the substance of things hoped for, and the evidence of things not seen." By faith he went out seeking a country, not knowing whither he went. It was the mainspring which inspired all his movements, enabling him to surmount the obstacles at home and the difficulties arising in his voyage in his search of the hoped-for New World. Doubtless this faith was inspired by the same great Spirit who moved Abraham to seek a country.

Looking at our America to-day, crowned with the blessings which have come to us since that day, our hearts swell with gratitude to our Heavenly Father for that faith which brought Columbus to these shores.

2. Benevolent institutions. We should thank God for the establishment and maintenance of homes for our own unfortunate citizens. The orphan homes, the country homes, the homes for the blind, the insane, and the deaf and dumb, are fruits of Christianity. Instead of a blush of shame coming to the face of those who attend these homes, and instead of attaching in our thoughts or words a taint of disgrace to any such, these institutions should be regarded as public benefactions, and a necessary stay in them as an honorable privilege.

Many a good man is overtaken in life's pilgrimage by misfortune, and in old age has no home and no loved ones able to furnish him one. It certainly is a source of thankfulness to God, who has provided so many comfortable homes by the operation of his providence through the machinery of human government for all such.

3. Our free schools. Every loyal American heart beats in harmony with the tributes of praise ascending to God for the network of our free school system, by which all our children can be educated. It is a sad reflection, that through the neglect of parents and guardians, many children fail to receive the educational advantages provided for them by the State. A compulsory law which would require the attendance of children at school would be as reasonable and just as the one which compels citizens to pay taxes to support the schools.

4. Religious liberty. We are thankful that all our people can worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences, none daring to molest or make them afraid. The devil of persecution and disturbance is bound by the strong chain of the law. All congregations, large or small, assembled for worship, are protected by our laws against disturbers. We are also glad that our laws, which protect true worshipers, likewise provide for the punishment of those who, in the name of religion, transgress the laws of both God and man. Every true lover of the home, which is one of the safeguards of our nation, rejoices that the two-edged sword of the law has cut the carbuncle of Mormonism from the American body.

Closely connected with religious liberty is the American Sabbath. A blow at this is a blow at that. Those who from other nations become American citizens should remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy, and not be allowed to introduce among our people their loose ideas and customs respecting this sacred day. God's plan of one day of rest after six of work is a wise one. Man needs it physically, mentally, and spiritually. It would be much to the advantage of our people every way if all individuals and corporations would strictly observe this reasonable arrangement of God and man. It is to be regretted that some among us desecrate the holy Sabbath by transacting business and indulging in worldly pleasures on the Lord's day. For this day of rest and recuperation we devoutly thank God.

5. Civil liberty. In our America the voters are the rulers, by the will of a majority of whom we consent to be governed. Hence among us the ballot-box is sacred. It is the ark of our covenant, in which each voter puts his testimony in regard to what he wishes the policies of the nation to be. Above this is the mercy-seat, where the Christian voter leaves his prayer for the mercy of God on the principles symbolized in the ballot which he deposits in the box. It is of the most vital importance that we ascertain the real majority. The only loyal and honorable way to do this is by a free ballot and a fair count. No voter should be allowed to be influenced by strong drink, bribery, betting, bulldozing, or in any other unlawful way. The nation's strong arm should be outstretched for the protection of every legal voter in the free exercise of suffrage in all sections of this great country.

In conclusion, I may say that our glad hearts and cheerful voices unite on this happy day with the multitudes of our American people in "offering unto God thanksgiving" for the bounties of his providence by which we are fed, clothed, housed and warmed. He has blessed our schools, and is bringing forward a patriotic and God-fearing generation to execute his great and benevolent design for our country. He has given us a great increase in material wealth and a wide diffusion of contentment and comfort in the homes of our people; he has given his grace to the sorrowing.

Thanksgiving in History.

e Day has a Scriptural Origin—Its Cele-ration in Ancient Israel, in Europe and n Our Own Land.

ROBABLY few persons have discovered for themselves that Thanksgiving Day has a Biblical origin, dating long before the Christian era; for among the laws given at Sinai we find the injunction: hree times thou shalt keep a feast unto in the year," etc. (Ex. 23: 14-16); and t third of these is called "the Feast of lathering, which is in the end of the yr, when thou hast gathered in thy la-bis out of the field." It began on the fif-teth day of the month Tisri, the seventh nth—that is, fifteen days after the new m n in our October—and continued sev-en days, afterward adding the eighth day, wh h had anciently been the wine-press fet. It was called the Feast of Taber-nacles, or booths, because during these eight days they dwelt in booths of green br ches, in memory of their sojourn in th wilderness. It was the annual thanks-giving for the vintage and fruitage. The fir and last days were Sabbaths, the eigh being kept as the great day of the fe . All the males were required to come to is feast, and God's special care was pr ised to their homes during their ab-sen (Ex. 34: 23, 24). Josephus ("An-tiq 8: 4, 1) speaks of the eminence of thi festival, and Plutarch calls it the greest and most perfect of the Jewish feas. Every seventh year at this festi-val here was a public reading of the law (Nehemiah 8), and the later Jews poured ope the sacrifices a libation, filling the pitchers at Siloam, and singing: "With joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of s vation" (Isa. 12: 3); and at this feast our Saviour, on the last day of the feast, "sto d and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let h come unto me, and drink" (John).

T Romans had an autumn festival not unli in its original thought, held in hon-or o Ceres, the goddess of grain; and as Ops "plenty"), the wife of Saturn, was godd s of crops and the harvest, the 19th and 20th of December, devoted to the Opa , followed the Saturnalia, and had com ing of the same rejoicing in the sources of nature, though disfigured com-mon with heathen license. The Saxons had "harvest home," and other Euro-pean peoples had similar festivals; and Christian gratitude early led to many publ thanksgiving services. One of the most noted of these was that celebrated in Leyden, Holland, October 3, 1575, on the first anniversary of the deliverance of that city from the besieging Spaniards. This Leyden thanksgiving was yet fresh in mind when the Pilgrim fathers sojourned there in 1608-20, and probably influenced the customs which they established in New England.

There was something prophetic of the Thanksgiving dinner of their descendants in the occasion of the first American Thanksgiving. The provision must have been bountiful, for there were about one hundred and forty persons, including ninety Indians of Massasoit's com-pany, who were entertained for three days. Rare opportunity was afforded the pilgrim mothers of the households, into which the colonists were divided, for the arts of cooking. All had their share of the supplies. Various kinds of sea-food were at hand; oysters the Indians brought them as desired. Ducks of the choicest variet , highly prized by the epicures of the present day; geese that would have done honor to the Michaelmas feast of England; game of tempting flavor, from the venison to broiled partridge; and, above all, the turkey, of which they found a great store in the forest, and which they have ever justly crowned queen of their bounty, as they will their descendants have been loyal, they have failed to imitate them in other respects—these all garnished their tables throughout the harvest week. Ket-tles, skillets, and spits were overworked, while for us their pewter plates, spoons, knives and skewers, which were kindly assisted by their fingers, made merry. For we these meats without the com-pany of the barley-loaf and the cakes of Indian meal, more highly prized than wheaten millions can imagine.

There is no record of formal religious thanksgiving in 1621, or of any observance in the following year. There was a special thanksgiving observed in July, 1623, originally appointed as as a day of prayer and fasting on account of prolonged drought and fear of the entire loss of the harvest. After the people had assembled to pray, rain fell in moderate and abundant showers, and the day of fasting was turned into rejoicing and thanksgiving. The records of Charlestown show a similar change of fasting to thanksgiving, February 23, 1631, on account of the arrival of a ship with food-supplies; and in 1630 a special Thanksgiving day was appointed for the arrival of Governor Winthrop of the Massachusetts Bay Colony, with a reinforcement of eight hundred colonists. Thanksgivings were at first for various special blessings — especially for the arrival of ships with provisions and new colonists—and were held at different seasons; but later they were in the late autumn or early winter, and in recognition of the harvests and fruits of the year. Similar days were appointed by the governors of the New Netherlands in 1644, 1645, 1653, and 1664, and by the English governors of New York in 1755 and 1770.

During the Revolution a day of thanksgiving was annually recommended by Congress, and there was a general thanksgiving for peace in 1784. In 1789 President Washington, by request of Congress, recommended a day of thanksgiving for the adoption of the national Constitution. A second proclamation was issued by Washington in 1795 because of the suppression of the "Whisky Insurrection" in western Pennsylvania. At the request of Congress, Madison, in April, 1815, recommended a day of thanksgiving for the restoration of peace with England. The official recommendation of the day, however, was mainly confined to New England, where annual proclamations were issued by the governors. In 1863 and 1864 proclamations of a national Thanksgiving day were issued. From that time on, proclamations have been issued annually by the several Presidents, as well as governors of the States and mayors of the principal cities; custom having fixed the time for the last Thursday in November.

Banished Stundists.

IN his report of his journey through Asiatic Russia, Dr. Baedeker says that he found many Stundists who were undergoing punishment for their faith. Like the Armenians, they had only to give up their religion and persecution would cease. Dr. Baedeker gives the following description of one of these colonies, which was typical of all:

At Gerusi, near the Persian frontier, a little town about 5,500 feet above the level of the sea, surrounded by high mountains, some forty to fifty Stundist families are kept in banishment, under close supervision. The native population of the place consists of Tartars and Armenians, whose languages our brethren do not understand, and who can shew them no sympathy. The country in the immediate neighborhood is stony and barren, and the native population are consequently obliged to seek employment at other distant places, but the Stundists are not allowed to leave the place. Thus they are condemned to idleness, and unless supplies were often sent to them they would not be able to live. The government makes a small allowance to those who are poor, but it is not sufficient to live on. To some of these banished brethren the question has been asked whether they wish to emigrate, as on the condition that they will never return to Russia, passports would be given them. But of all whom I have come in contact with, only two have expressed a wish to leave Russia for good; the others will rather suffer a while, feeling assured that liberty will eventually be granted to the Gospel and its ministry. Their prayers for the Emperor and his government are unceasing and fervent. But, as in every time of persecution in the history of the Church, a sifting as well as a confirming effect is seen. Some who have been drawn to follow a human leader, and who are not personally fixed on the Rock of Ages, are swept away, and some have returned to the Greek Church, while others have been more established in their faith. All remained loyal to the Czar.

Luther's Home in Decay.

Eisleben, the old-fashioned Thuringian town in which Luther was born, is gradually fading from view. One by one the streets are being abandoned, and the houses crack and fall into ruins, owing to subterranean disturbances brought on by the big hollow spaces made in salt-mining for many centuries. The other day nine houses tumbled in. The geologist, Professor von Fritsch, in Halle, says there is no doubt that the salt layers in the soil underlying the town are in process of dissolution, consequent on subterranean inundations. The town is now appealing to public charity, for one-half the inhabitants have lost their all.

Why should you get an Autoharp? Because you can learn to play the popular music—Operas, Hymns, Waltzes, Marches, Galops, Mazurkas, Sc tisches, Yorkes, College Songs—almost at sight. No teacher is necessary, as our instruction book is complete. Our music is a new figure notation. You do not l to know a single note of the old system. It is easily tuned, and keeps in tune a long time. Never gets out of order.

Style 2 3-4 (Upper illustration). Two keys—F and C allowing beautiful modulation. It has 23 strings and five bars producing the following five chords : and Bb Major and C and G Seventh. Its appearance is handsome—imitation ebony bars and bar supports, forming a contrast to the light redwood sounding board measures 18 1-2 inches long by 10 inches wide. Packed in a nice box, including instruction book containing 22 pieces of music, a music rack, imitation tortoise s pick, brass spiral pick, and a tuning key. Price, $5.00.

Style 2 7-8 (Lower illustration). Two keys, F and C, with the relative Minors, allowing many most beautiful modulations and musical effects. Has 28 stri seven bars, producing the following seven chords : C, F and Bb Major, C and G Seventh, D and A Minor. In appearance same as 2 3-4. The size, however, is lar measuring 20 inches long and 11 1-2 inches broad. This gives more volume, and as it has more strings and chord bars, should be very seriously considered. Packe a nice box, including instruction book containing 24 pieces of music, a music rack, imitation tortoise shell pick, brass spiral pick, and a tuning key. Price, $7.

A Seared Conscience.

An illustration of the Apostle's warning, that a conscience long silenced and defied may become seared as with a hot iron, is given by a clergyman from his own experience. He says: "I called on one of my hearers, a man of unblemished moral character and a regular attendant on my ministry. After my visit he walked with me, having business in the direction I was going. On our way he made this confession, which was one of the most appalling I ever heard. Said he: 'Spend your time and strength upon the young; labor to bring them to Jesus. It is too late for such as me. I know that I have never been a Christian. I fully believe that when I die I shall be lost, but somehow I do not care. I know perfectly all you can say, but I feel it no more than a stone.' This man died with just such words upon his lips. He had delayed seeking God in youth, and grown up a mere formalist, until his heart became as adamant."

"Do not Stammer."

Edwin S. Johnston, one of Phila.'s Specialists, succeeded in curing himself of this dreadful affliction, and has probably made more wonderful cures than any living practitioner. His system is endorsed by Hon. John Wanamaker, Ex-Postmaster-Gen., U. S., who in reply to a recent letter to an inquirer wrote: "Mr. Edwin S. Johnston, has been very successful in curing stammering, and to any one who is suffering with that affliction, I would recommend a trial of his system."

Prof. Horatio C. Wood, M.D., LL.D., University of Pa., says: "I believe Mr. E. S. Johnston to be honest and capable, and have seen some striking results of his work."

Bishop Cyrus D. Foss, Phila. Pa., in a testimonial letter says: "It gives me pleasure to certify to my high confidence of Mr. E. S. Johnston's method of treatment of stammering."

REQUESTS FOR PRAYERS.

At the Converts' Sunday afternoon Prayer Meeting at the Bowery Mission, prayer was offered on November 17, in accordance with the requests of the following persons, who also ask the prayers of ur readers:

For the Conversion of Relatives and Friends. "Reader," La Vergne, Ill., for God's grace in the [illegible] husband also for a brother who is wild and wayward.——S. V. S., Erie, Pa., that God would reclaim a son who is undutiful, leaving his poor mother without any aid.——M. F., Newburgh, N. Y., for the conversion of a young man [illegible] confessing Christ not loving him.——"Subscriber," Bridgeport, Conn., for the [illegible] a young man who needs God's grace to keep him from evil.——"Believer," Hudson, M[illegible] [illegible] friend in poor health and without employment, that he may be led to God in his trouble and obtain a position.——M. A. S., Hardin, Mo., for a nephew who is trying to be a Christian, but is a slave of intoxicating liquor, and [illegible] to give up the habit.——"Teacher," East Hardwick, Vt., for a boy in her class who wants to lead a Christian life, but is being hindered; also for the boy's father, who is a sceptic, that God would save his soul and keep him from obstructing his son's religious life.——R. B., New York, for the salvation of two dear relatives in Virginia.——"Anonymous," for her father, mother and brother, who are all out of Christ, and the brother is going the downward road; also for a dear sister and her husband, who as yet know not God.——"Constant Reader," Morrisonville, N. Y., on behalf of a loved daughter, that God would make her his own child.——"Anxious sick mother," Fort Worth, Tex., that her dear boy might be saved and kept from evil companions and from all the snares of the world; also that her own faith may be increased and a quiet confidence be enjoyed.——A. L., Newton, Kan., for the conversion of herself and a loved one, that anxiety and uncertainty may give place to blessed assurance and acceptance.——"Anonymous," Frewsburgh, N. Y., that one who is away from home may return healed in body and mind and a new creature in Christ Jesus.——S. K. S., Dearborn, Mo., for the conversion of a brother whose life has been a troubled one, that his soul may be saved and that he may be enabled to get the means to pay his debts; also for a son who is not yet saved.——"Constant Reader," Burlington, N. J., for the salvation of a dear son who is indifferent to Christ's claims.——"Reader," Seattle, Wash., for a beloved brother, who has been the subject of many prayers; also for a son-in-law, whose life is strictly moral, that he may be led to see that only through Christ can he be saved."——"Friend," Bowen's Corners, N. Y., for the conversion of a friend.——"Mother," Northfield, Mass., for the salvation of three sons and a daughter; also that her husband may see the duty of family prayer.——E. C. P. Wellfleet, Mass., on behalf of her husband, who is not concerned abont his soul's salvation; also for the conversion of her daughter, who is in feeble health; also for her two brothers and their families, who are all out of Christ.——A Mother and Grandmother, Brooklyn, N. THE CITY CHILDREN.

O! THE children, Love's best flowers,
Hearts so full of glee and mirth,
Sunbeams of these homes of ours,
Making Paradise on earth.

Oh, ye fond and loving mothers!
Who in such take dear delight,
Oh, ye sisters there are others!
Withered sore by suffering's blight.

In our rich and mighty city,
Daily do they droop and fade,
'Tis those poor ones need your pity —
Hearts and hands to render aid.

Go ye to the streets, the highway,
Haunts of wretchedness and sin,
In the alley, court, and byway,
Seek for Christ those gems to win.

Extracts from Dr. Hunter's Famous Lectures.

NO. 6.

Why Consumptives Lose Flesh.

The nourishing of the body depends on the power of assimilation in the lungs. No quality or amount of food can add the weight of a grain to the body beyond the lung power of assimilation. The food may be good and the stomach digest it perfectly, and yet the patient lose flesh from day to day. It is surprising how few understand why this is. They suppose that if the food is good and the digestion perfect the patient will gain flesh, or at least hold his own. But such is not the fact. The stomach has little to do with the making of new blood from the food eaten. It is simply a mill to grind and dissolve the foods that their nutritious elements may be separated from the crude mass and absorbed—(taken up as a milky liquid)—and carried to the lungs to be there endowed with life, changed into blood, and made capable of repairing the wastes of the body. This change is what is meant by assimilation. It depends on the size and freedom of the lungs, and only takes place in proportion to the volume of air we breathe. With large lungs a man is fleshy and strong, because he assimilates or transforms into blood, a large quantity of food. A man with small lungs is thin and weak, because he can only assimilate a small quantity. Our weight is fixed by the volume of air we habitually take in at a breath. This we call our vital capacity. Poor food and bad digestion may keep us below this standard, but no dieting can ever make us rise above it.

When the lungs bec me diseased their capacity for air is diminished, and, to exactly the same extent, their power to make new blood from food is reduced. A loss of flesh and strength must take place. If the disease increases, the obstruction to breathing also increases, and the body keeps on wasting or consuming away in the same proportion, and no diet can prevent it.

This is a law of God, and there can be no exception to its operation. You cannot find in all the world a strong, muscular man who has not large lungs and great breathing power, or a man with small lungs and feeble breathing power who is not both thin and weak.

In the light of science, how absurd is the hackneyed promise, so often made by physicians, to build up the flesh and strength of consumptives by food. They have no more power to stop the loss of flesh by food than they have to stop the revolutions of the earth upon its axis. The only way the body can be built up is to stop the lung disease which is wasting it, and improve the breathing. Accomplish this and nature will do the building up.

ROBERT HUNTER, M. D.

NOTE.—Dr. Hunter's book can be obtained by all readers of The Christian Herald who are anxious about their lungs, by addressing him as above.

The Cost of Solomon's Temple.

Few people, even in these days of palmy extravagance and millionaire display, have any adequate impression of the gigantic cost of the great temple of Solomon. According to Villalpandus, the "talents" of gold, silver and brass used in its construction were valued at the enormous sum of £6,879,822,000. The worth of the jewels is generally placed at a figure equally as high. The vessels of gold, according to Josephus, were valued at 140,000 talents, which reduced to English money (as has been shown by Chapel's reduction fables), was equal to £575,296,203. The vessels of silver, according to the same authorities, were still more valuable, being set down as worth £646,344,000. Priests' vestments and robes of singers, £2,010,000; trumpets, £200,000. To this add the expense of building materials, labor, etc., and we get some wonderful figures. Ten thousand men hewing cedars, 60,000 bearers of burdens, 80,000 hewers of stone, 3,300 overseers, all of which were employed for seven years, and upon whom, beside their wages, Solomon bestowed £6,733,997. If their daily food was worth fifty cents each, the sum total for all was £63,847,-688 during the time of building. The materials in the rough are estimated as having been worth £2,545,337,000.

What one Man Proves Another may Try

Yes, and without thoroughly understanding it either, he may confidently try it. Try it with a predisposition in its favor as everything that is tried at all should be tried to secure the best results.

The Electropoise has been tried by hundreds and thousands of thoroughly reliable people and with the best results, and in all kinds of diseases, and works marvels because it simply re-inforces health in its fight against disease.

This is all that need be said except to give the testimony of two men who have proved it.

Worked Like a Charm.

MORRISTOWN, Ohio, June 18, 1894.

Dear Sir:—I can say that I have certainly been benefitted by the Electropoise, and as to Mrs. Gailey's case, the thing has worked like a charm. Her constipation has taken its departure and her general health is very much improved, her vigor and strength being very much increased. For myself I have the greatest faith that eventually it will entirely cure me.

Respectfully yours,
REV. R. R. GAILEY,
(Pastor Presbyterian Church).

A Valuable Companion.

NORFOLK, Va., Sept. 5, 1892.

This is to certify that the Electropoise is, in my judgment, a marvelous instrument for relieving diseases — particularly those of the throat, bowels, etc. I wrote to a friend that I would not be without mine for one thousand dollars if I could not get another. It is a valuable traveling companion. Nearly all whom I have seen use it speak in glowing terms of its power.

THE LARKIN IDEA

"Chautauqua" Rocker and Reclining Chair.

It can be adjusted to any position, and changed at will by the occupant while reclining. A synonym of luxurious ease and comfort. It is built of oak, polished antique finish, with beautifully grained three-ply veneer back. The seat, head and foot rests are upholstered with silk plush in crimson, old red, tobacco brown, old gold, blue or olive, as desired. It is very strong and perfectly simple in construction. Fully guaranteed.

To be a user of "Sweet Home" Soap is a proof of wise economy and progressive thought. Forehanded, thrifty people pay us in one sum—$10.00—once a year, for the year's family supply of Soaps. As a result they obtain besides their full supply of Soaps, the entire benefit of the saving of middlemen's profits, in a valuable premium, which, if purchased from a retail dealer, would itself cost $10.00. Neither the dealer from whom you would buy your Soaps, nor the one from whom you would buy the article we offer as a premium, can increase in any way the value of the goods, but each must have a profit if you employ their services as middlemen. If you buy direct from us—the manufacturer—the several profits and expenses of retail dealer, jobber, travelling salesmen, etc., are all saved, and accrue to you. Only those already our customers—and they are everywhere, ready to endorse us—realize the possibilities that ten dollars offer when wisely used in co-operation with the ten dollars from each of fifty thousand other people through a marvellously perfect and unique organization, that supplies daily necessities direct from factory to family.

PRAISE THE LORD.

A Sermon Preached by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., at Washington, D. C., on the Text: Habakkuk 3: 3: "The earth was full of his praise."

BY a sublime egotism man has come to appropriate this world to himself, when the fact is that our race is in a small minority. The instances of human life, as compared with the instances of animal life, are not one to a million. We shall enlarge our ideas of God's goodness and come to a better understanding of the text if, before we come to look at the cup of our blessing, we look at the goodness of God to the irrational creation.

Although nature is out of joint, yet even in its disruption I am surprised to find the almost universal happiness of the animal creation. On a summer day, when the air and the grass are most populous with life, you will not hear a sound of distress unless, perchance, a heartless schoolboy has robbed a bird's nest, or a hunter has broken a bird's wing, or a pasture has been robbed of a lamb, and there goes up a bleating from the flocks. The whole earth is filled with animal delight—joy feathered, and scaled, and horned, and hoofed. The bee hums it; the frog croaks it; the squirrel chatters it; the quail whistles it; the lark carols it; the whale spouts it. The snail, the rhinoceros, the grizzly bear, the toad, the wasp, the spider, the shell-fish, have their homely delights—joy as great to them as our joy is to us. They do not go moping or melancholy; God says they are filled with good.

The worm squirming through the sod upturned of plowshare, and the ants racing up and down the hillock, are happy by day and happy by night. Take up a drop of water under the microscope, and you find that within it there are millions of creatures that swim in a hallelujah of gladness. God feeds all these broods, and shepherds all these flocks, and tends all these herds. He sweetens the clover-top for the oxen's taste; and pours out crystalline waters, in mossed cups of rock, for the hind to drink out of on his way down the crags; and pours nectar into the cup of the honeysuckle to refresh the humming-bird; and spreads a banquet of a hundred fields of buckwheat, and lets the honey-bee put his mouth to any cup of all the banquet; and tells the grasshopper to go anywhere he likes, and gives the flocks of heaven the choice of all the grain-fields. The sea anemone, half animal, half flower, clinging to the rock in mid-ocean, with its tentacles spread to catch its food, has the Owner of the universe to provide for it. We are repulsed at the hideousness of the elephant, but God, for the comfort and convenience of the monster, puts forty thousand distinct muscles in its proboscis,

I go down on the barren sea-shore and say, "No animal can live in this place of desolation;" but all through the sands are myriads of little insects that lead a happy life. I go down by the marsh and say, "In this damp place, and in these loathsome pools of stagnant water, there will be the loathsomest death;" but, lo! I see the turtles on the rotten log sunning themselves, and hear the bogs quake with multitudinous life. When the unfledged robins are hungry, God shows the old robin where she can get food to put into their open mouths. Winter is not allowed to come until the ants have granaried their harvest, and the squirrels have filled their cellar with nuts. God shows the hungry ichneumon where it may find the crocodile's eggs; and in arctic climes there are animals that God so lavishly clothes that they can afford to walk through snow-storms in the finest sable, and ermine, and chinchilla, and no sooner is one set of furs worn out than God gives them a new one. He helps the spider in its architecture of its gossamer bridge, and takes care of the color of the butterfly's wing, and tinges the cochineal, and helps the moth out of the chrysalis. The animal creation also has its army and navy. The most insignificant has its means of defense: the wasp its sting; the reptile its tooth; the bear its paw; the dog its teeth; the elephant its tusk; the fish its scale; the bird its swift wing; the reindeer its antlers; the roe its fleet foot. We are repelled at the thought of sting, and tusk, and hoof, but God's goodness provides them for the defense of the animal's rights.

Yea, God in the Bible announces his care for these orders of creation. He says that he has heaved up fortifications for their defense—Psalm 104: 18: "The high hills are a refuge for the wild goats, and the rocks for the conies." He watches the bird's nest—Psalm 104: 17: "As for the stork, the fir-trees are her house." He sees that the cattle have enough grass—Psalm 104: 14: "He causeth the grass to grow for the cattle." He sees to it that the cows, and sheep, and horses have enough to drink—Psalm 104: 10, 11: "He sendeth the springs into the valleys, which run among the hills; they give drink to every beast of the field; the wild asses quench their thirst."

Amid the thunders of Sinai God uttered the rights of cattle, and said that they should have a Sabbath. "Thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy cattle." He declared with infinite emphasis that the ox on the threshing-floor should have the privilege of eating some of the grain as he trod it out, and muzzling was forbidden. If young birds were taken from the nest for food, the despoiler's life depended on the mother going free. God would not let the mother-bird suffer in one day the loss of her young and her own liberty. And he who regarded in olden time the conduct of man toward the brutes, to-day looks down from heaven and is interested in every minnow that swims the stream, and every rook that cleaves the air, and every herd that bleats, or neighs, or lows in the pasture.

Why did God make all these, and why make them so happy? How account for all this singing, and dancing, and frisking amid the irrational creation? Why this heaven for the animalcule in a dew-drop? Why for the condor a throne on Chimborazo? Why the glitter of the phosphorus in the ship's wake on the sea, which is said to be only the frolic of millions of insects? Why the perpetual chanting of so many voices from the irrational creation in earth, and air, and ocean—beasts, and all cattle, creeping things, and flying fowl, permitted to join in the praise that goes up from seraph and archangel? Only one solution, one explanation, one answer—God is good. "The earth is full of the goodness of the Lord."

I take a step higher, and notice the adaptation of the world to the comfort and happiness of man. The sixth day of creation had arrived. The palace of the world was made, but there was no king to live in it. Leviathan ruled the deep; the eagle the air; the lion the field; but where was the sceptre which should rule all? A new style of being was created. Heaven and earth were represented in his nature. His body from the earth beneath; his soul from the heaven above. The one reminding him of his origin, the other speaking of his destiny—himself the connecting link between the animal creation and angelic intelligence. In him a strange commingling of the temporal and eternal, the finite and the infinite, dust and glory. The earth for his floor, and heaven for his roof; God for his Father; eternity for his lifetime.

The Christian anatomist, gazing upon the conformation of the human body, exclaims, "Fearfully and wonderfully made." No embroidery so elaborate, no gauze so delicate, no color so exquisite, no mechanism so graceful, no handiwork so divine. So quietly and mysteriously does the human body perform its functions, that it was not until five thousand years after the creation of the race that the circulation of the blood was discovered; and though anatomists of all countries and ages have been so long exploring this castle of life, they have only begun to understand it.

Volumes have been written of the hand. Wondrous instrument! With it we give friendly recognition, and grasp the sword, and climb the rock, and write, and carve, and build. It constructed the Pyramids, and hoisted the Parthenon. It made the harp, and then struck out of it all the world's minstrelsy. In it the white marble of Pentelicon mines dreamed itself away into immortal sculpture. It reins in the swift engine; it holds the steamer to its path in the sea; it snatches the fire from heaven; it feels the pulse of the sick child with its delicate touch, and makes the nations quake with its stupendous achievements. What power brought down the forests, and made the marshes blossom, and burdened the earth with all the cities that thunder on with enterprise and power? Four fingers and a thumb. A hundred million dollars would not purchase for you a machine as exquisite and wonderful as your own hand. Mighty hand! In all its bones and muscles, and joints, I learn that God is good.

Behold the eye, which, in its Daguerrean gallery, in an instant catches the mountain and the sea. This perpetual telegraphing of the nerves; these joints, that are the only hinges that do not wear out; these bones and muscles of the body, with fourteen thousand different adaptations; these one hundred thousand glands; these two hundred million pores; this mysterious heart, contracting four thousand times every hour—two hundred and fifty pounds of blood rushing through it every sixty seconds; this chemical process of digestion; this laboratory, beyond the understanding of the most skilful philosophy; this furnace, whose heat is kept up from cradle to grave; this factory of life, whose wheels, and spindles, and bands are God-directed. If we could realize the wonders of our physical organization, we would be hypochondriacs, fearing every moment that some part of the machine would break down. But there are men here who have lived through eighty years and not a nerve has ceased to thrill, or a muscle to contract, or a lung to breathe, or a hand to manipulate.

I take a step higher, and look at man's mental constitution. Behold the lavish benevolence of God in powers of perception, or the faculty you have of transporting this outside world into your own mind—gathering into your brain the majesty of the storm, and the splendors of the day-dawn, and lifting into your mind the ocean as easily as you might put a glass of water to your lips.

Watch the law of association, or the mysterious linking together of all you ever thought, or knew, or felt, and then giving you the power to take hold of the clew-line, and draw through your mind the long train with indescribable velocity—one thought starting up a hundred, and this again a thousand—as the chirp of one bird sometimes wakes a whole forest of voices, or the thrum of one string will rouse an orchestra.

Watch your memory—that sheaf-binder that goes forth to gather the harvest of the past, and bring it into the present. Your power and velocity of thought—thought of the swift wing and the lightning foot; thought that outspeeds the star, and circles through the heavens, and weighs worlds, and, from poising amid wheeling constellations, comes down to count the blossoms in a tuft of mignonette, then starts again to try the fathoming of the bottomless, and the scaling of the insurmountable, to be swallowed up in the incomprehensible, and lost in God!

In reason and understanding, man is alone. The ox surpasses him in strength, the antelope in speed, the hound in keenness of nostril, the eagle in far-reaching sight, the rabbit in quickness of hearing, the honey-bee in delicacy of tongue, the spider in fineness of touch. Man's power therefore, consists not in what he can lift, or how fast he can run, or how strong a wrestler he can throw—for in these respects the ox, the ostrich, and the hyena are his superior—but by his reason he comes forth to rule all: through his ingenious contrivance to outrun, outlift, outwrestle, outsee, outhear, outdo. At his all-conquering decree, the forest that has stood for ages steps aside to let him build his cabin and cultivate his farm. The sea which raved and foamed upon the race has become a crystal pathway for commerce to march on. The thunder-cloud that slept lazily above the mountain is made to come down and carry mailbags. Man, dissatisfied with his slowness of advancement, shouted to the Water and the Fire, "Come and lift!" "Come and draw!" "Come and help!" And they answered, "Ay, ay, we come;" and they joined hands—the fire and the water—and the shuttles fly, and the rail-train rattles on, and the steamship comes coughing, panting, flaming across the deep. He elevates the telescope to the heavens, and, as easily as through the stethoscope the physician hears the movement of the lung, the astronomer catches the pulsation of distant systems of worlds throbbing with life.

I take a step higher, and look at man's moral nature. Made in the image of God. Vast capacity for enjoyment; capable of first of eternal joy, and, though now disordered, still, through the recuperative force of heavenly grace, able to mount up to more than its original felicity: faculties that may blossom and bear fruit inexhaustibly. Immortality written upon every capacity: a soul destined to range in unlimited spheres of activity long after the world has put on ashes, and the solar system shall have snapped its axle, and the stars that, in their courses, fought against Sisera, shall have been slain, and buried amid the tolling thunders of the last day.

You see that God has adapted everything to our comfort and advantage. Pleasant things for the palate; music for the ear; beauty for the eye; aroma for the nostril; kindred for our affections; poetry for our taste; religion for our soul. We are put in a garden, and told that from all the trees we may eat except here and there one. He gives the sun to shine on us, and the waters to refresh us, and food to strengthen us; and the herbs yield medicine when we are sick, and the forest lumber when we would build a house, or cross the water in a ship. The rocks are transported for our foundation; and meta upturned for our currency; and wild beasts must give us covering; and the mountains must be tunneled to let us pass; and the fish of the sea come up in our net; and the birds of the air drop at the flash of our guns; and the cattle on a thousand hills come down to give us meat. For us the peach-orchards bend down their fruit, and the vineyards their purple clusters. To feed and refresh our intellect, ten thousand wonders in nature and providence—wonders of mind and body, wonders of earth, and air and deep, analogies and antitheses; all colors and sounds; lyrics in the air; idyls in the field; conflagrations in the sunset; robes of mist on the mountains; and the "Grand March" of God in the storm.

But for the soul still higher adaptation: a fountain in which it may wash; a ladder by which it may climb; a song of endless triumph that it may sing; a crown of unfading light that it may wear. Christ came to save it—came with a cross on his back; came with spikes in his feet; came when no one else would come, to do a work which no one else would do. See how suited to man's condition is what God has done for him! Man is a sinner; here his pardon. He has lost God's image; Christ retraces it. He is helpless; Almighty grace is proffered. He is a lost wanderer; Jesus brings him home. He is blind; and at one touch of him who cured Bartimeus, eternal glories stream into his soul. Jesus, I sing thy grace! Cure of worst disease! Hammer to smite off heaviest chain! Light for thickest darkness! Grace divine! Devils scoff at it, and men reject it but heaven celebrates it!

At this season of thanksgiving I wish you good cheer for the national health. Pestilence, that in other years has come to drive out its thousand hearses to the cemeteries, has not visited our nation. It is a glorious thing to be well. How strange that we should keep our health when one breath from a marsh, or the sting of an insect, or the slipping of a foot, or the falling of a tree-branch might fatally assault our life! Regularly the lungs work, and their motion seems to be a spirit within us panting after its immortality. Our sight fails not, though the air is so full of objects which by one touch would break out the soul's window. What a trip, after a year's tossing on the sea, would come in with so little damage as ours have, though we arrive after a year's voyage.

I wish you good cheer for the national harvest. The garners are full, the storehouses are overcrowded, the canals are blocked with freights pressing down to the markets. The cars rumble all through the darkness, and whistle up the flagmen ahead of night to let the Western harvests come down to feed the mouths of the great cities. A race of kings has taken possession of this land—King Cotton, King Corn, King Wheat, King Grass, King Coal. Our nets bring up supplies from the cod, salmon, and mackerel fisheries; the whaler's harpoon was never more skillfully flung.

I wish you good cheer for civil and religious liberty. No official spy watches the entrance here, nor does an armed soldier interfere with the honest utterance of truth. We stand here with our arms free to work, and our tongues free to speak. This Bible—it is all unclasped. This is a pit—there is no chain round about it. There is no snapping of musketry in the street. Blessed be God that to-day we are free men, with the prospect and determination of always being free. No established religion: Jew and Gentile—Arminian and Calvinist—Trinitarian and Unitarian—Protestant and Roman Catholic—on the same footing. If persecution should come against the most unpopular of all the sects, I believe that all other denominations would band together, and arm themselves, and hearts would be stout, and blood would be shed, and the right of men to worship God according to the dictates of their conscience would be contested at the point of the bayonet.

Praise ye the Lord! I am glad that last Thursday the people came in from Southern plantation, from Lowell factories and off from Western prairies, and up from Pennsylvania coal-mines, and out from Oregon forests, and in from New England farms, and wherever God's light shines, and God's rain descends, and God's mercy broods, the thanksgiving rose. Praise ye the Lord! Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord!

THE GREAT PHYSICIAN.

By REV. C. H. MEAD.

THE room was cheerful, well lighted, and well ventilated, three important requisites to make a Mission room attractive. The singing, led (not drowned) by an organ, was soulful and inspiring; another attraction good for any place. "Hark! from the tombs a doleful sound," may be good in some places, but "Throw out the life-line," is much more appropriate for a Gospel life-saving station. The room was well filled with an audience that would have convinced the most sceptical that there was at least one place where extremes met. Here wealth came to worship and poverty to pray, and over all the good God watched to bestow a blessing on each. Broadcloth found its opposite in rags, while the sober, redeemed man sat side by side with the poor fellow out of whom the demon of drink had not yet been cast. The trophies of grace and the victims of sin were neighbors, occupying the same pew, while the conductor of the meeting was a magnificent specimen of what the power of God could do to make a sober and bright-faced Christian out of a drunken and profane sinner. Wonderfully saved himself, he was wonderfully in earnest to save others.

Such testimonies as were given there! One of the speakers had been in prison a score of times, for all sorts of offences, and several had occupied a cell more than once. Many had been thieves, and with one or two exceptions, all had been drunkards. Saved! The angels themselves seemed to join in the songs of praise, that between the testimonies, came from the very souls of those who had been thus redeemed.

"YES, PARTNER; THE GREAT PHYSICIAN IS HERE," HE SAID.

In the midst of this thrilling scene, through the door came a boy carrying a boot-black's kit, and leading a man by the hand, and it was easily seen that drink had another victim in that man. He dropped in a vacant seat in the far rear, but the boy, putting down his kit in front of the man, marched up the aisle until he stood in front of the leader. As the song ceased, he looked up into the smiling face and said with a trembling voice, "Please sir, is the physician in?" "The physician! what physician, my lad?" "Why, sir, the great physician. My partner down there is in an awful bad way. He can't leave drink alone, and yet he wants to. He told me he'd give a hundred dollars if he could go even one day and not touch it. He's been to doctors, but he goes right on drinking and getting worse every day. I was wondering what I could do, when a few moments ago, after telling a lady about it, she told me the only one who could cure him was the great physician, and she said I would find him here in the Mission. Oh, sir, is he in? My partner has got lots of money, and can pay well, and I've saved up some money, and I'll give all I've got if the great physician will only cure my partner. Please tell me, is he in?"

The tears were coursing down the boy's cheeks, and there were but few dry eyes in the room. The leader's voice was choked with emotion as he said earnestly:

"Yes, my boy, the Great Physician is here, and he can cure your partner, without money, and without price. I was a drunkard for more than twenty years, and he cured me on the spot where you stand two years seven months and eighteen days ago about nine o'clock in the evening and what he did for me, he did for many others here. Didn't he, boys?"

"Yes! Glory to God, he did," was the quick response. The boy looked around at the company of saved men, and his own face beamed as bright as theirs as he said:

"Oh! I am so glad. My partner is the best fellow in all the world, and he's been so good to me. I began blacking his boots two years ago, and one day when I was giving him a shine, he saw me crying, and asked me what was the matter, and when I told him mother was dead, and I did not know what we could do about burying her, he went right along with me and got a splendid coffin, and had her buried in a beautiful lot, and had a nice stone put up. Then he found a good home for Katie, my sister, and bought me a nice chair for people to sit in while I shined their boots, and he said we would be partners. Just think how proud I was to have a rich man the partner of a boot-black only fourteen years old. The business has been good, but, oh, if my partner can only get cured of his drinking, I'll feel as if I had done something for one who has been so good to me and Katie, and who got such a nice coffin for mother. Please, sir, won't the Great Physician cure him right away?" And as the boy asked this question, he ran back to where his partner sat, to lead him up to the front. He was well dressed, and save for the marks of drink had a noble-looking face. His hat had fallen off and his head rested heavily on his hands, as the boy gently approached him and in a melodious voice, half whispered:

"Yes, partner, he is here, and this man says he can cure you."

The man looked up at the leader, who had followed the boy, and said:

"Who is this Great Physician, and what is his name?"

"His name is Jesus, and he is here to cure and save all that come unto him."

And then the leader told him the story of the Christ, in a tender, simple way, and as he talked, the man and boy listened intently, and suddenly the boy said:

"Oh, partner, maybe he can save me from getting what you've got, while he is curing you of what ails you."

His partner's eyes filled with tears.

"Yes, Willie, he can do that. My mother told me of this Jesus when I was a boy, and if I had only let him save me when I was your age, I'd not have to be cured now. Come, little fellow, we'll be partners in this as well as the business, and God helping us, I'll be cured of what I've got, and you'll be saved from getting it."

That night was a wonderful one in the Mission, for the partners were both saved. Willie graduated from the bootblack's trade to the counting-room of his partner, and they are partners still, both in temporal and spiritual things.

A CHILD SUPERINTENDENT.

Little Libbie Hettman, Aged Twelve, and Her Wonderful Sunday School Work in Wisconsin.

RARELY indeed does it happen that the person chosen as Superintendent of a Sunday School is other than a man or woman of considerable experience, but Mr. W. W. Wheeler, a missionary of the American Sunday School Union in Wisconsin, writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD concerning a very exceptional case in that State.

S. S. SUPERINTENDENT, LIBBIE HETTMAN.

Miss Libbie Hettman, whose picture is given on this page, is perhaps the youngest Sunday School Superintendent in Wisconsin, if not in America. In 1893, Mr. W. W. Wheeler organized a school at Woodman, Wis., which flourished for nearly a year, and then was abandoned for lack of workers. After a few weeks, two little girls, aged between eleven and twelve, being anxious to do something for the Master, decided to try to reorganize and maintain this Sunday School. They secured funds for supplies and began their work, which has been sustained successfully until the present time. At length one of them removed to another place, since which the other, Miss Libbie Hettman, has carried on the school alone.

The school numbers from twelve to twenty. It provides the only regular gathering for public worship in the village, and is doing great good. The missionary visited the school last winter, and conducted the quarterly review, and was very much gratified with the familiarity of the children with the Golden Texts, and the general teachings of the quarter's lessons. Recently, he re-visted the place and Miss Hettman sadly told him the school would have to be abandoned for lack of supplies. He told her he would furnish supplies from funds placed in his hands for such purposes. The little Superintendent cried:

"Oh, Mr. Wheeler, you have made me so happy, for I don't want to close the school."

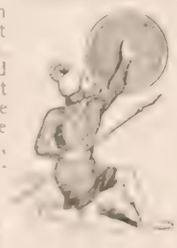
How many places there are in our country where Sunday Schools might be maintained, if older Christians but had the spirit of consecration which these little girls have manifested. A little over one dollar was all that was needed to insure the continuance of this girl's good work. There are thousands of godly men and women who, rather than see the little Sunday School at Woodman stopped, would have given ten times the amount needed for its support.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor, and also upon those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

DAVID AND JONATHAN.

S. S. Lesson for Dec. 15. I. Samuel 20:32-42. Golden Text, Prov. 18:24.

THREE characters are depicted in the lesson and each deserves a careful study. Saul, David and Jonathan are each types of manhood, reappearing in all times and in various circumstances. We miss the object of studying these Old Testament lives, if we think of them as unique specimens of mankind, belonging to their own remote age and having no connection with our modern life. There are men among us to-day who act in their own spheres as Saul acted in his, basing their lives on the same principles and going down to ruin as surely as he went. It does not happen now that a young man is taken from his occupation on his father's farm, and, without any preliminary training, placed on a throne; but there are many whose opportunities are magnificent and whose prospects are bright. They may become great and good, serving their generation and doing Christ's work on earth, or they may do as Saul did, disobey God, follow their own inclinations and become wretched themselves and a curse to all about them. A boy makes a great mistake who says, "The life of this old Israelitish king does not concern me; I shall never be a king." He may make his life just as disastrous as Saul's and by acting in the same way. The trouble described in the lesson can be traced back to one moment, when the same evil thought entered into Saul's mind that enters many a child's mind now. Saul heard people praising him, which was very pleasant, as it is to every one; but they were giving higher praise to David, which was not pleasant. Saul had slain his thousands, they said, and David his tens of thousands. Saul was envious and jealous. He could not bear to hear anyone more highly praised than himself. That was the beginning of the evil. He brooded on the fancied wrong, as many a boy broods on the praise bestowed at home, or at school, on another boy, and the evil seed was planted in his heart. Then see the injustice of his conduct! He began to hate David, who had done him no wrong. He broods till his jealousy becomes murderous. He throws his javelin at David, sends him on dangerous expeditions, tries in many ways to secure his death. It is so now. Many murderers in our time have related how they dwelt on one evil desire until they felt, when the opportunity came, that they must kill. No one becomes bad all at once. The evil is in the heart first and it [illegible] If it is welcomed and encouraged to stay, it begins to show in the life in quarrelsome words, in abuse and, at last, in blows. Envy is a horrible thing; it should never be allowed to dwell in the heart. If it enters, it should be instantly expelled, otherwise it may ruin the life.



ORIENTAL SPEARMAN.

In striking contrast to Saul, is his son Jonathan. If anyone had cause for ill-feeling toward David, it was Jonathan. He might naturally hope to succeed his father on the throne, but David's growing [illegible] Jonathan knew that David, and not he, would be the next king. Yet he loved him, gave him a suit of his princely robes, and his sword and his bow. There was no room in his great heart for jealousy. That he was a dutiful son, the narrative shows, but he was not blind to his father's faults. Saul tried to make him envious, intimated that his own hatred of David and wish for his death was on Jonathan's account, and assured him that so long as David lived, his own chances of succession to the throne were small. But such appeals could not move Jonathan. There are some people who can be turned to any course of conduct by showing them that their interests are involved. There are others — and these are the Christ-like people—who are not concerned about their own advancement; but who will do right even though their own interests suffer by it. Jonathan was of this kind. He remonstrated with his father, reminded him how David had put his life in peril for his country's sake, and how glad Saul himself was to see the giant fall before David's attack. Saul was not altogether lost at that time. He was affected by his son's appeal and vowed that David's life should not be taken. But the evil had too strong a hold upon him to be permanently shaken off, and in a short time he renewed his murderous attack. Jonathan was amazed when he heard that his father had broken his vow, and thought David must be mistaken. Then the plan described in the lesson was arranged. Jonathan found that he was wrong. Saul hated David still, and hated him so desperately that he attacked Jonathan himself, for pleading for his friend. It is a sad thing when a son has cause to be ashamed of his father; but there are times when the son has to decide between his duty to God and his duty to his father and then there must be no hesitancy. Not even a father's authority can justify wrong.

A QUIVER OF ARROWS

David's character, at this period of his life, was altogether commendable. He was suffering wrongfully and through no fault of his own. He knew the king hated him. When a man, time and again, flings a deadly missile at another, there is no room for doubt about his dislike. Yet David showed no resentment. He was even active in serving the king. When Saul had his attacks of insane melancholy —for his malignity at last seems to have become lunacy—David took his harp and tried to cheer him with music. He obeyed the king when he sent him to fight, with the obvious hope that the mission would be fatal. There was no sullenness, no disobedience, no retaliation. Few young people could have acted with such magnanimity. Sometimes this conduct is the one thing demanded of a boy. He is treated unjustly, blamed and punished when he is innocent, and knows that his employer, or his teacher has an unreasonable dislike of him. That is the time for strength of character to show itself. A great man, many years afterward, gave an injunction of which David's life in these trying circumstances was an illustration. He said: What glory is it if when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? but if when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God." We know it was so in David's case. God called him "a man after his own heart." That is a reward worth having, and it is to be had now. The thought that God sees and is pleased, may encourage a child to be patient and gentle and cheerful under a nagging mistress, or a fault-finding, unreasonable employer. That is being like Christ, who, when he was reviled, reviled not again.

"SAUL CAST A JAVELIN AT HIM TO SMITE HIM"

Jonathan gave his artillery unto his lad. Artillery is the old word for any kind of arms. In the Revised Version the word is translated according to the modern use by the word "weapons." It was simply his bow and arrows that Jonathan handed to the boy. He did not need them for the business he had now to do. David might be a mark for Saul's spear, but to Jonathan he was an object on which to lavish affection. Yet he was a brave man, accustomed to hard fighting; not an effeminate man. Great warriors have often been remarkable for their friendships. When Alexander the Great lay sick in Cilicia he was attended by a physician whom he loved as a friend. He received a letter warning him that the physician was in the pay of his enemy Darius and intended to poison him. Alexander read the letter and said nothing When the physician visited him he took the medicine from his hand, drank it and then gave him the letter to read. True friendship has no doubts.

'Between my seed and thy seed forever. Many years afterwards, when Jonathan was dead, David felt this vow still binding upon him, He asked his servants, "Is there yet any left of the house Saul, that I may show him kindness Jonathan's sake?" When they told hi that there was a sick cripple who was son of Jonathan, David sent for him a gave h

Montaigne tells Corinthian named Endamidas who in will bequeathed to two friends, as lega the care of his mother and his daugh People laughed at such a will, but friends accepted the trust, and one of th dying before he could fulfil it, the ot discharged both obligations. He suppo his friend's mother as long as she liv and gave the fatherless girl a dowry actly the same as that he gave to his c daughter.

We have sworn, both of us. One of strongest of historical friendships was t subsisting between William, Prince Orange, afterward King William III. England, and William Bentinck. W William was ill with small-pox—in th times often a fatal disease — Benti waited upon him continually. Will said afterwards, "Whether Bentinck s or not while I was ill, I know not; this I know, that through sixteen d and nights, I never once called for anyth but that Bentinck was instantly at side." Not till the prince was out danger did Bentinck leave him and the it was to lie down and grapple with the ease which he had contracted in the ser of his friend. Afterwards when Bentin wife fell ill during her husband's abse the king though overwhelmed with tional cares, personally assured himsel her condition and despatched messen daily to Bentinck to keep him informe her progress.

SILHOUETTES FROM LIFE

WRITTEN SPECIALLY FOR THE CHRISTIAN HERALD BY

The Little Rift.

"I DECLARE," said Mr. John Freeholder, laying down the carving-knife and fork, with the air of a martyr, "I declare I am discouraged! These potatoes, my love," he added a ...inute after, again turning to the unfor...nate mistress of the feast, "are watery and underdone, raw in fact. If Bridget cannot even boil a potato properly, she would better leave, but I do not know that it is wholly her fault. If you would only look after things yourself more carefully."

So the uncomfortable and dreary meal dragged itself through, the father finding something as a peg on which he might hang a complaint, in every dish and every course, the mother growing more and more silent and pale, the children, hardened by the frequency of such scenes, devouring their gooseberry pie at the end of the repast, with as much relish, as if they had been seated at a table where everything was cheerful, and serenity reigned.

Well said the wise man, "Better is a dinner of herbs where love is, than a stalled ox, and hatred therewith," and "Better is a dry morsel and quietness therewith, she was so lacking in duteous behavior, but she was beyond the age of parental correction, and, at home, he occasionally spanked one of the babies, as a vent for his anger with their sister. That look of hers, across the room made him very uncomfortable to-night.

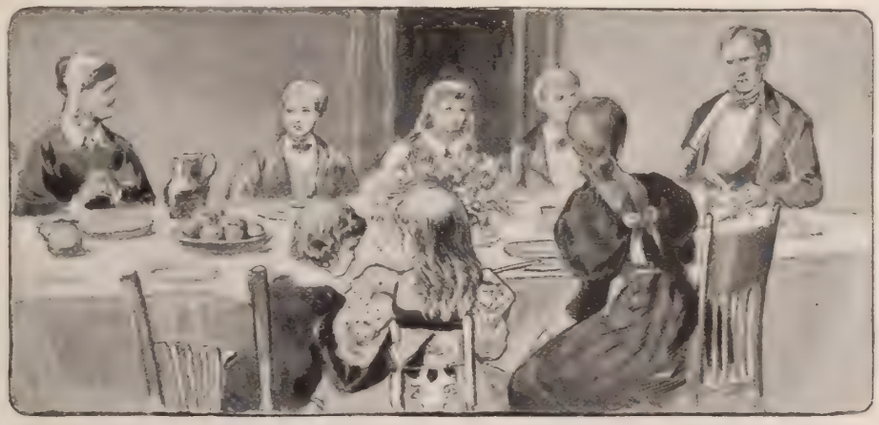
"Big as she is," he said to himself, "she'll find that I'll punish her in a way she'll feel. My lady will be ordered to her room, and shut up for a day or two on a diet of bread and water, if she doesn't learn to control her eyes and her tongue."

Poor Mr. Freeholder! At this instant, the pastor with benignant face, and courteous tone, said, gently imperious:

"We will be led in prayer by Brother Freeholder."

It was a beautiful prayer, but not a syllable, not a sentence in its course, aroused any other sensation than that of antagonism, in the heart of Agnes Freeholder. Her mother instinctively guessed her state of mind, and was not surprised, when, the meeting over, and an opportunity afforded young people to meet the committee, and unite with the church, Agnes, who had lately been seriously considering the matter, walked resolutely past the door. She said nothing, but had she spoken, she would have said that her father's crossness and her father's prayer were, in combination, her stumbling-block on the threshold of the kingdom.

"Take heed that ye offend not one of these little ones," says the Saviour, and "woe to him by whom the offence cometh!"



"What do you do with this knife, Lucilla?" asked Mr. Freeholder.

than a house full of sacrifices, with strife."

"Mamma," said the oldest daughter, when Mr. Freeholder had stamped himself out of the house, to prayer-meeting, shutting the front door with a bang, "What does ail papa? Why is he so worried, so cross and unreasonable always? He never has a word of praise for us when things are at their best, and he is forever blaming everyone when they are the least bit wrong. I am ashamed of my father. Don't let us go to prayer-meeting. Papa did not wait for us."

"Darling," said Mrs. Feeholder, "don't allow yourself to speak with disrespect of your father. Business worries him, probably. He really does not mean all he says. It is simply a matter of habit into which he has fallen, and personally, though it used to hurt me, I do not mind it so much now. I am distressed at the impression it leaves upon our friends, because it somehow puts the wife and the home into a false position, when the head of the house indulges in unkind reflections in the presence of guests. When we are alone I can endure it."

"Yes, mamma, you do endure it. Your lip quivers, your eyes are blurred with tears, you cannot help shrinking as if you had been struck when one of the boys is harshly sent away from the table. When I grow up and am married," said the precocious daughter, firmly, "I will begin right. The first time my husband dares to find a word of fault I'll crush the thing in the bud. See if I don't!"

Mother and daughter went to prayer-meeting, entering the lecture-room late. Mr. Freeholder, from his seat at the pastor's right, sent them a severely reproving glance which the wife did not trouble herself to return, and which the girl did return, with one of defiance. Mr. Freeholder sometimes felt as if he could shake Agnes,

Years after, John Freeholder bore his cross in humiliation, when his sons fled their home as if it had been a prison, his daughters remained obstinately outside the Church, and even his wife, patient to the last, treated him with tolerant pity Unrestrained temper and petty despotism had brought forth their legitimate consequences.

It is the little rift within the lute,
That by and by will make the music mute.

A Tangible Answer.

Two men in New York were discussing the utility of prayer, and one of them shocked the other by remarking that he did not believe God paid any attention to individual prayers. His friend said: "I am just going to the Fulton street noon prayer-meeting. Come with me and you are pretty sure to hear something in the way of testimony that may cause you to change your opinion." The invitation was accepted. There was nothing remarkable in the service until a plain, quiet, elderly gentleman rose. He said: "I wish to mention a very brief incident for the encouragement of others. I set out this morning to make some purchases for a sick man. On my way I was called into a miserable tenement house to see a woman who was absolutely without food and fuel. I could not leave her destitute, so I spent the only five dollars I had in relieving her, and asked God to replace it, so that I might keep my promise to my other friend. I did not tell a soul about it. As I entered this room half an hour ago, a friend (there he sits) put this five dollar bill into my hand to be used in the Lord's work. This [holding up the bill] is what I call a tangible answer to prayer."

A Capitoline Soliloquy.

OUR editorial chair having four legs, two of them in New York and two of them in Washington, our readers will want to know about our reception in the National Capital. It was wondrously cordial and far beyond our deserts. How does the city of Washington appear to us now that we have taken up residence here for the first time in our life? It is a complete fascination and enchantment, not only because of the present but because of the past. Wrapped up and interlocked with the welfare and the very existence of this nation stands the city of Washington, on the Potomac, planted here by way of compromise. At the dining-table of Alexander Hamilton it was decided that if the South would agree that the National Government should assume the State debts, then the North would agree to have the capital on the Potomac instead of on the Delaware. So the capital went from Annapolis to Philadelphia, and from Philadelphia to Trenton, and from Trenton to New York, and then passed from New York to the Potomac.

"Well," you say, "what's all that to me?" You have just as much to do with the city of Washington as your heart has to do with your body. Washington is the heart of the nation. If it send out good blood, good national health. I believe that it has come to a higher condition of morality than it has ever before reached. What an improvement since the day when the most flourishing liquor establishments were under the National Capitol, and Congressmen and Senators went there to get inspiration before they made their speeches, and went there to get recuperation afterward. Thanks to Henry Wilson and a few like him for the overthrow of the abomination. During the war there were one hundred gambling-houses in Washington; there were over five hundred professional gamblers here. One gambling-house boasted that in one year it had cleared over half a million dollars. But what a vast improvement in the morals of the city! Duelling abolished. No more clubbing of Senators for opposite opinion. Mr. Covode of Pennsylvania, no more brandishes a weapon over the head of Barksdale, of Mississippi. Grow and Heitt no more take each other by the throat. Griswold no more pounds Lyon, Lyon snatching the tongs and striking back, until the two members in a scuffle roll on the floor of the American Congress. Oh, there has been a vast improvement!

Now give us a great national religion. I do not mean a religion controlled by State officials, but I mean a religion dictated by a nation gospelized. I mean a religion mighty enough to control the morals of a nation. Old politicians will not be reformed. The undertakers must hurry up the funerals in these cases of political mortification. They will never be any better, those men. But gospelize the voters, and then you will have gospelized officers of the government. The pivot on which this nation turns is the ballot-box. Set that pivot on the Rock of Ages. There is only one being who can save this nation, and He is God. We talk a great deal about putting the name of God more thoroughly into the Constitution of the United States. Ah! it is not God in the Constitution that we want; it is God in the hearts of the people. God and the angels on our side. First came the war of the American Revolution. That was the birththroe that ushered this nation into life. Then came the war of 1812. That was the infantile disease through which every child must go. Then came the war of 1861. That was the great typhoid which was to revolutionize the national system; and when this nation resumed specie payments, that was the settlement of the doctor's bill! Now let the nation march on in its grand career. Let all the rivers of this land flowing into the Gulf, or into the Atlantic and Pacific seas, be rivers of salvation, and all the mountains, Olivets of truth and Pisgahs of prospect, and the mists rising from the lakes will be the incense of holy praise.

THE STORY OF "THE TOMBS."

New York's Famous Prison and its Record of Sin and Sorrow—Sunday Morning Service Among the Prisoners.

PASSING along the west side of Centre street, New York, within a few minutes' walk of City Hall, the pedestrian finds himself in front of a gloomy-looking building of a style of architecture that strongly recalls the Egyptian. Ascending a broad flight of stone steps and passing in between massive stone pillars, the visitor stands on the threshold of the most famous prison in America—the Tombs. Its interior is a quadrangle, containing some three hundred cells, arranged in tiers, one above another, and each tier with a corridor. The entrance to the prison proper is on Franklin street, through a locked and barred grating. On the left of the entrance is the Warden's office, from which a short hallway leads to the cells. The main entrance is on Centre street, and to the right of this entrance is the famous Tombs Police Court, with the Court of Special Sessions on the left. The latter is connected with the prison in the rear by a structure known as "the Bridge of Sighs," so-called from the fact that condemned prisoners were led across it after conviction. Two years ago, however, when the new Criminal Court building was erected on the west side of Centre street between Franklin and White a new "Bridge of Sighs" was built to connect it with the Tombs prison. This structure is shown in one of the illustrations on this page. Even in the two years since it was built it has already acquired a pathetic history. It is mainly of iron very stoutly guarded, and spans the entire width of the street, the prisoners being led to it from the Tombs by a covered passage-way which is shown on the left of the picture. Many a hopeless prisoner, as he treads that iron pathway, with an officer of the outraged law on either side to prevent escape, realizes too late that the "way of transgressors is hard."

Where the Tombs Prison now stands, was, in pre-Revolutionary days, the site of the public gibbet which was planted in a small island in the Collect Pond—a marsh that was afterward reclaimed, and filled in. Seven negro slaves were executed there in 1741 for alleged complicity in the negro riots of that year, and since then a great number of other criminals, white and black have met a similar fate for capital offences. The present building was erected in 1840. Originally of white granite, it is now a dingy-faded gray. For several years past the annual commitments of prisoners have averaged 25,000.

The Tombs Police Court has become historic. It is a large, dingy, ill-lighted and ill-ventilated room, the bench and bar at the north end and seats for witnesses and spectators on either side of the room. Here have sat in judgment on offenders against the law a long line of Justices, some of them of national fame. Here, too, have been arraigned hundreds of thousands of criminals of both sexes and of all ages and nationalities, accused of every crime on the calendar, from simple intoxication to murder. During half a century, the Tombs Police Court has had before it a great array of noted criminals, the most important of whom, after a hearing and commitment, have been taken to other courts for trial. More of the human flotsam and jetsam, the waifs and drunkards, the dissolute and profligate, the wanton and the unfortunate, have been arraigned at the bar of the Tombs than in any other court. Justice has been tempered with mercy, and thousands of [illegible] first offenders," have been saved from a career of crime by the leniency of the Tombs Justices in discharging them with wholesome advice instead of consigning them to a cell.

Saturday night is usually a season of revel with the lowest class of the city's population and there are many arrests for drunkenness in consequence. Such offenders are kept together in a large cell or room, which has frequently contained over a hundred prisoners, all of whom are arraigned on Sunday morning before the Justice. Court opens early and this class of offenders is disposed of as rapidly as possible, fines and imprisonments being imposed in proportion to their offences. Many are discharged with a reprimand and salutary caution. It is a sad and significant fact that the great majority of Saturday night arrests are for drunkenness. In the motley and dilapidated crowd in the "pen"—as the prisoners' cage is called—are some striking contrasts. Respectable workingmen and stylishly dressed women are jostled and pushed by low-browed ruffians and by the unfortunates of the street; merchants and clubmen who have been "taken in" for too much conviviality, stand side by side with pick-pockets, common drunkards and viragos who fill the air with their profanity. Here and there a battered face tells of a brawl with fists, clubs or knives as weapons. Police justices are usually keen judges of human nature and the really hardened criminal and professional rogue has little chance at the bar of a police court, while mercy is often extended to the penitent and unfortunate.

Our colored illustration on the first page presents a familiar scene in the Tombs on Sunday morning. Divine service is held at nine o'clock without chapel or meeting-house, the court of the main prison being utilized for that purpose. The Chaplain, Sidney G. Law, stands on the corridor platform where the prisoners can see him from their cell in the tiers on either side, above and below. Some of them sit quietly on their benches, listening; some stand at the grating and watch the preacher, earnestly drinking in every word of the service he is conducting, and even joining in the singing. A few appear totally indifferent, and do not show themselves at all. Every syllable of the short sermon can be heard at the farthest corner of the corridors. Prison officers stand around ready to interfere, should any prisoner interrupt the service, but this rarely occurs. At intervals, as the music or the preaching continues, some prisoner who is needed, it may be, in the justice's court, is quietly removed. Formerly no singing was permitted, but now it is one of the attractive features of the service. Visitors are allowed in the prison Sundays at certain hours, and during service a number are always present.

"THE BRIDGE OF SIGHS."

"The Way of Transgressors is hard."

It is a touching sight to see these friends of the prisoners—sometimes a parent or a sister, or wife—standing alongside the grating that interposes between their dear ones and liberty. A mother will stand thus beside her wayward son, clasping his hand, while the preacher tells of the great salvation that is open even to the chief of sinners through the blood of Jesus. Sometimes a child is among the visitors, and the little one looks with wide-open eyes at the strange sights, and wonders why her father or brother is in there behind those ugly bars, instead of being at home and catching her up in his arms, as he used to do. It is a strange audience, often embracing black and white, Americans, stolid Germans, Britons, tawny-faced Italians, and other nationalities—all integral parts of the great army of those who are experiencing either themselves or through others, the punishment that follows law-breaking.

Of late years, the Sunday religious services at the Tombs have been greatly improved. They are usually conducted by the regular missionary chaplain attached to the prison. Rev. Mr. Law, assisted by Mr. Lindsley, the former conducting a morning, the latter an afternoon service at 3 o'clock. Mr. Lindsley also holds a Tuesday afternoon service. There is no lack of volunteers who aid in making the hour of worship attractive and spiritually profitable. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has placed a Bible in every cell and none who are committed there need suffer for the want of the true "Bread of Life." Much has been accomplished by such means in the direction of reclaiming the erring ones, and the hearts of even hardened criminals have been reached and softened by these ministrations of love and mercy.

A BISHOP DROWNED.

News has been received of the drowning on Lake Nyassa, in South-eastern Africa, of Bishop Maples, who, in June last, was appointed to succeed Bishop Hornby whose health had broken down. The Bishop was a missionary of twenty years standing. He went out under the auspices of The Universities' Mission and had labored with remarkable success through Nyassaland and the adjacent countries. The Bishop was crossing the lake in a boat in company with Mr. Joseph Williams, a missionary friend, when a sudden squall capsized the boat and both were drowned. The disaster has caused general sorrow throughout the country.

ROYALTY IN A PAWN SHOP.

Sunday School teachers or missi workers may find an illustration for th use in a report recently published in t Fanfulla, an Italian journal. It says tl King Humbert went a few days before, the chief pawn-shop in Rome to see son thing of the working of the system, wh in Italy is under the charge of the gove ment. He was distressed by seein woman negotiating a loan for a "lir which is worth only twenty cents. asked if there were many people as poor that, and was told that there were then keeping a large number of pledges of th amount. A RECORD OF CHRISTIAN EFFORT.

What Has been Accomplished, Through "The Christian Herald," with its Readers' Co-Operation, In Less than Six Years.

INSTANCES are recorded where it has been shown to be possible to concentrate, in a remarkably brief space, the work of an ordinary life-time. Such an experience, in a considerable measure, has fallen to the lot of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, its conductors and its army of readers, within less than six years, as the result of their combined and consecrated efforts in various fields of Christian work at home and abroad. It may not be inopportune — toward the close of another year of mutual activity in such service — to briefly glance at the work accomplished, and to draw therefrom inspiration for efforts in such other avenues as may be providentially opened in the future.

As its readers well know, it has been the privilege of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to conduct during these years an ever-increasing work in the dissemination of Gospel literature in many parts of the world, but especially in our own land. That this has assumed mammoth proportions may readily be understood when it is explained that the total number of volumes of religious literature distributed has already passed the half-million mark, the exact number being 580,000. Of these over 50,000 were Teachers' Bibles, 50,000 were Gospel Hymns, while 230,000 were "From Manger to Throne," "The Highway of Life," New Testaments, and Miscellaneous Volumes.

This vast work, which has grown beyond all anticipation, has been accomplished at a cost of $453,000, an average outlay of over $80,000 each year since it began. The current season will witness the largest output of elevating literature on record, the present estimate of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S distribution of volumes being not less than 6 Million, involving an expenditure of, literally, hundreds of thousands of dollars. As to the spiritual results of such a work, it is unnecessary to speak. These books will be richly prized and sought after wherever pure, uplifting and helpful literature is appreciated.

Works of benevolence and far-reaching charity have formed a most important part of the mission of this journal. Looking back over the years, the paper and its readers seem to have been divinely led into fields of Gospel and philanthropic duty. We need only refer to the splendid generosity that enabled THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to send to the starving Russian peasants in 1892 a $50,000 cargo of breadstuffs; to expend $35,000 in relieving a multitude of destitute families in New York in 1893; that sent $3,000 to the victims of the Constantinople earthquake in 1894, and last winter gave $27,000 to relieve the drouth-stricken farmers of Nebraska, Dakota, Colorado and Kansas. In two years $15,000 has been devoted to the support of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home, where nearly four thousand waifs have been sheltered. Mr. Moody's Gospel work was aided with a gift of $5,000 and many have volunteered, with their prayers and their contributions, to help the spiritual work of the Bowery Mission, on the East-side of New York. Even now, there are many of the persecuted Armenians who are fed and sheltered by the same liberality, at a time when all other succor has failed. Who shall say what showers of rich blessing have not fallen upon many hearts, in answer to the countless prayers of thankfulness that have ascended to the throne? It is well to have a share in a spiritual investment that is so certain of rich reward.

To any sincere Christian, it would be an astonishing and delightful experience to read the letters that come to us in any one day. They are a surprising evidence of how many ways God has of using a journal conducted with the paramount object of advancing the kingdom of Christ. Not the least valuable of the services it has been enabled to render is the suggestion of methods of Christian usefulness. Thousands of God's children scattered all over the land wish that in some way they could devote a portion of their time to the service of their Master, but do not know what to do or how to attempt it. They read in these columns of what someone similarly situated is doing, and they gladly follow the example. Thus the news of a good work done in one city starts a multitude in various cities, and the workers are blessed in service, and are made a blessing to others. Similar service has been rendered in the conflict with evil in public and private life. An effort to succor the tempted or reclaim the fallen, in one city, when described in these pages has become the seed which has sprung up in many cities, bearing fruit for the Lord's garner in many other places.

The great community of believers in prayer have been drawn into conscious brotherhood by the numerous requests for prayer, which we publish from week to week. Not only in the Converts' Sunday Afternoon Prayer Meeting at the Bowery Mission in New York, but in many a little prayer-meeting in distant churches and in many a home circle, these requests are presented at the Throne of Grace, and so the tried and troubled are helped, and praying Christians all over the land are fulfilling the apostolic injunction, "bear ye one another's burdens."

To these delightful services, which it has been a pleasure to render, must be added the encouragement which has through the efforts of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD been given to isolated Christian workers in this and other lands. Some are very lonely, laboring amid indifference, or open hostility and they are at times ready to give up the battle. To such heroic workers a letter from some reader who has learned through these columns, of the hard struggle, comes with its sympathy, like a cup of cold water to the parched lips of the thirsty traveller and very often it encloses substantial help as proof of its sincerity. The Bethesda Home in Brooklyn, "Sister Charlotte" in New York, Rev. George W. Sharp in the country districts of Missouri, Mrs. Jamal in Jerusalem, Dr. Currie in Equatorial Africa and many other servants of Christ have gratefully acknowledged the help and sympathy which have come to them through this journal.

REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D., AND DR. LOUIS KLOPSCH.
(The Editor and the Proprietor of "The Christian Herald.")

On this page are two portraits which we feel justified in presenting for the reason that, for the last six years, the originals have been far more closely identified with the readers of this journal in every Christian enterprise than is usual in the relations between editor and publisher on the one hand and readers on the other. Dr. Louis Klopsch as proprietor and Rev. Dr. Talmage as editor, are appreciative of the fact that much of the success of these undertakings is due to the cordial and sympathetic relations that have at all times existed between the conductors of the paper and its readers.

Dr. Talmage was recently called as Associate-Pastor of the First Presbyterian Church at the National Capital and has already entered upon his new duties in a pastoral field more far-reaching and important than any other to which he could have been invited. In the prime of mid-life and the zenith of his powers, he has there such an unexampled opportunity of rendering earnest and practical service to the Master as will inspire him to labor with redoubled zeal. His removal to Washington, however, will not interfere in the slightest measure with the efficient performance of his duties as Senior Editor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, for no week will pass in which he will not spend several days at his editorial desk in the Bible House, New York. He will therefore continue to be in constant and sympathetic touch with his readers everywhere, as he has constantly been at all times since the very beginning of his editorial conduct of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Let Us Give Thanks.

AFTER a season of most intense commercial depression, a revival of trade has set in that promises a protracted era of unexampled prosperity. From every quarter come good tidings of unusual activity. With mills reopening, factories resuming, trades reviving, money freely circulating, abundant crops, and returning confidence, let us devoutly give thanks to our Heavenly Father for a future so full of promise.

Victories of the Trowel.

WALKING to-day among the beautiful churches, and the grand public buildings of Washington, I am reminded that while the victories of the sword have often been sung, and the power of the pen has been recognized, and sculptor's chisel has been honored, there is one employment that has not come to due appreciation. The trowel has had much to do with the world's history and progress. I celebrate the victories of the trowel. When the Prince of Wales, in England, after the ceremony of laying the corner-stone of a bridge, or art-gallery, or castle, or church, hangs up the trowel which he used at the ceremony among the hundreds of trowels of similar occasions with which he has adorned a room in his palace, he only honors that implement which has been potent for ages. The sword does well, but it must have an armory in which to drill. The pen does well, but it must have a library building in which to put its productions. Sculptor's chisel does well, but it must have a gallery in which to stand its achievements. Science does well, but it must have a laboratory to shelter its batteries and telescopes. Religion does well, but it must have churches in which to pray. Come, then, all prowess, all literature, all science, all civilization, and all religion, and help celebrate the victories of the trowel. It is an unpretentious implement, and is thrown carelessly among the kit of mechanic's tools. The world has allowed all the years from the creation to this moment to pass without one word of eulogy or appreciation. We all know the sound of it, and day by day we hear it on the rising walls of our cities, and we hardly look up, and do not realize what the trowel has done, and is now doing in the nations. As it rings out on the air, it gives the key-note to the Grand March of the centuries. Oh! the trowel! When it moves, the world moves, and when it halts the world halts, and when it goes down, the world goes down, and when it rises the world rises. The Pantheon of Rome, the Parthenon of Athens, the Alhambra in Spain, the Taj Mahal in India, Solomon's Temple in Jerusalem, the cathedrals of Salisbury and York and Lincoln and St. Paul, Arch of Trajan, Arch of Titus, Arch of Constantine. All these are the children of the trowel. What built Thebes? What built Babylon? What built London? What built these great sea-coast cities? What built the bright homes of the hemispheres? The trowel. It has been the iron hand that more than once has held in its palm the destiny of the nations. May the blessing of God come down upon all who wield it! May its victories in the future surpass its victories in the past! And long after the last sword has clanked into its scabbard, never again to be unsheathed, may the trowel go on building up our individual, domestic and national prosperities.

Work for All.

LET us all go to preaching. Send polished Paul to Athens, and plain Bartholomew down among the fishing-smacks by the sea. Do not look so anxiously into your pockets for your diploma from Yale, or your license from Presbytery. If the Lord does not send you into the ministry, no canon of the Church can shoot you into it. But if he has put his hand on your head, you are ordained, and your working apron shall be the robe, and the anvil your pulpit; and while you are smiting the iron, the hammer of God's truth will break the flinty heart in pieces. Peter was never a sophomore, nor John a freshman. Harlan Page never heard that a tangent to the parabola bisects the angle formed at the point of contact by a perpendicular to the directrix and a line drawn to the focus. If George Muller should attempt chemical experiments in a philosopher's laboratory, he would soon blow himself up. And hundreds of men, grandly useful, were never struck on commencement stage by a bouquet flung from the ladies' gallery. Quick! Let us find our work. You preach a sermon—you give a tract—you hand a flower—you sing a song—you give a crutch to a lame man—you teach the Sabbath-class their A, B, C—you knit a pair of socks for a foundling—you pick a splinter from a child's finger. Do something! Do it now! We shall be dead soon!

Our Mammoth Edition.

THIS Edition of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD consists of ONE MILLION copies of twenty-eight pages each. In its production thirty-five hundred reams of fine super-sized and calendered paper were consumed. The total aggregate weight of the MILLION copies is Three Hundred and Twenty Thousand Pounds, every copy weighing about five ounces. To produce this edition, it was necessary to pass full sheets five and one-half million times through the press. As the average output for each press is about fifty thousand impressions weekly, it required twenty-six presses for the space of an entire month to turn out this edition of one million copies of 28 pages each, aggregating 112,000,000 columns of printed matter. This is the equivalent of a printed strip a full column in width, and over 22,000 miles in length, or almost equal to the circumference of the globe. Each column being equal to two pages of an ordinary book of average size, the total edition, if presented in book form, would fill 560,000 volumes of 400 pages each—a far larger collection than all the libraries of religious literature in America combined.

Nearly three thousand dollars were expended on the edition for printing inks, and Uncle Sam gets about four thousand dollars for postage. The MILLION copies, with the exception of the color work, were printed by D. Appleton & Co., the leading publishers of the United States. The color work on the premium exhibits was done by the Moss Engraving Co. The Tombs picture on the first page, a dingy, cheerless subject, is admirably reproduced, true to its gloomy and sunless nature, by the finest color printers in New York, while the binding of the entire million copies, a most stupendous undertaking, was done by the Knoepke Bindery, the greatest of its kind in the world. The whole expense attending the production of this one edition of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is upwards of Thirty-eight Thousand Dollars.

Fifty young ladies spent a month addressing this huge edition of ONE MILLION copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to as many good Christian men and women throughout the length and breadth of this land, whose names are recorded in this office as faithful and loyal children of the Heavenly King, who delight in the progress of the Lord's Cause at home and abroad. May their names be thus inscribed in the Lamb's Book of Life!

OUR MAIL-BAG.

Joel Bradford, Dayton, O. Are there Christian Churches in Palestine now, of different denominations, like our own?

Yes; in the larger cities principally. They are of different denominations and attended by native Christians.

Saml. Frey, Bay City, Mich. I have, at different times, heard it stated how many letters, words, verses, chapters and books, there are in the Bible, but have not the figures at hand. Can you supply them?

The Bible contains 3,566,480 letters, 810,697 words, 31,175 verses, 1,189 chapters, and 66 books.

Rural Worshiper, Macon, Ga. Is it right to drive a horse to church Sunday morning, and have him stand two hours in harness, and then drive back, when the animal has worked all the week?

"A merciful man is merciful to his beast." He will give it an opportunity to rest one day in the seven, or at least will work it lightly.

Eben Winterbottom, Ogden, Utah. How long did it take Noah to build the Ark?

According to the ablest chronologists, the order to make the Ark was given by the Lord to Noah about 2448 B. C., and the Ark was finished and the people and animals began to enter it about 2349 B.C., a period of ninety-nine years (see Gen. 6: 14 and Gen. 7: 1).

Laura Winthrop, Detroit, Mich. 1. What is the cost of a trip from New York City to Egypt and Palestine and return? 2. What is the cost per month of board in Palestine?

1. The expense for one person, traveling comfortably but by no means luxuriously, would be about $400. 2. About $20 American money per month.

J. W. Barton, Pittsburg, Pa. In relating an incident or repeating a conversation, where an oath has been used, is it wrong to repeat the oaths as the words of another?

It is decidedly wrong, and apart from the moral aspect of the matter, it is in execrable taste. Conversation interlarded with oaths is unfit to be repeated, and nothing can justify its repetition, except as sworn testimony in court.

Mildred White, Covington, Ky. Please give your opinion of the holding of fairs in the church.

There may be objections to a church holding a fair, but if it is right to hold a fair, there seems to us no reason against its being held in the church building. There is no special sanctity in the wood, or bricks and mortar. It is a question of association only, and that should prevent anything indecorous being done. Lotteries are objectionable however.

P. P. Wray, Denver, Colo. How long a period of time does the Book of Genesis cover? 2. Which Book in the Bible covers the longest space of time?

1. Scientists and chronologists do not attempt to fix the period of time covered by the first two verses of Genesis 1. Probably ages, as we reckon them may have elapsed while the earth was without form and void, until "the Spirit moved on the face of the waters." From Adam to the death of Joseph is reckoned as 1635 years. 2. Genesis, undoubtedly.

Augusta F——, Danbury, Conn. Why does God let a Christian woman be married to a man who loves drink and will not be reformed by her efforts?

Perhaps she did not ask his guidance. Sometimes God lets his children have their own way, that they may see that his will would have been better for them and may learn to trust him. It may be that this trial is intended for her discipline and for the ultimate rescue and salvation of her husband. Being married to him, she should pray for him and by kindness and patience seek to win him to Christ.

Mrs. I. I. Princeton, N. J. Can a boarding-house or hotel keeper who works servants on Sundays from early morning till late at night, be a Christian?

There are household duties that may properly be regarded as works of necessity and the performance of which involves no sin, and as a hotel or boarding-house is merely a larger household, this remark applies to either. But if the proprietor, instead of reducing Sunday tasks and recognizing the right of his help to sufficient time for religious duties, insists on doing work on that day which might be done at another time, he must be a very inconsistent Christian, if one at all. There are many hotel keepers and boarding-house managers who do with less help and less work on Sundays, to make the day as much a day of rest as possible and allow time for religious duties.

T. Bessner, Reading, Pa. Is it wrong for a Christian to sue anyone, when he has been really treated badly and cannot get redress?

There may be extreme cases in which it becomes a duty, to others as well as to ourselves to appeal to the law. Those who follow the Christian life, however, will shun litigation and respect the admonition given in Matt 5: and I. Cor. 6: 6-7.

Robt. Ellison, New Haven, Conn. Does Hebrews 6: 4-6 preclude the possibility of the restoration of backsliders?

It is difficult to say what degree of guilt brings a man into the condition referred to. If any backslider repents, it is obvious that the passage does not refer to him. Our duty in the case of a backsliding brother is not to speculate but to warn, exhort, and entreat him to return, reminding him of the promise of God to receive him. Many Christians have fallen into grievous sin who have repented and have afterward led consistent lives.

Lemuel Brown, Boston, Mass. Does history tell of any instance of sweating blood, other than that of our Saviour?

Many cases are mentioned by various writers, both ancient and modern, but in almost every instance they are unauthentic. Aristotle mentions the sweating of blood as a malady caused by excessive mental emotion. Charles IX., the monarch who ordered the infamous massacre of St. Bartholomew, in which 60,000 Protestants perished, is said to have had shortly before his death a bloody sweat induced by the terrible agony of remorse.

A. Belden, Elmira, N. Y. Does God still call and qualify men for various kinds of work? How may we know that we are called?

He does so call and qualify them. See Ephesians 4: 11-12. Constant prayer should be offered to him for guidance. Indications of his will may be read in the circumstances surrounding the person seeking light. If God has really called, opportunities for service will come. The safe course is to do the work nearest at hand and continue doing it until opportunities for other and higher service are presented.

Inquirer, Little Rock, Ark. 1. What denomination preach that Jesus Christ was not the Son of God? 2. What are the seven wonders of the world?

1. The Socinians, a sect founded by Socinus Faustus in the sixteenth century. Unitarians, Anti-Trinitarians, Anabaptists, and to some extent Universalists are allied to this heretical doctrine. 2. The so-called seven wonders were the Pyramids of Egypt; the Colossus of Rhodes; Diana's Temple at Ephesus; Babylon's Hanging Gardens; the Statue of Jupiter Olympus; the Mausoleum of Artemisia and the Pharos of Alexandria.

Alfred Pease, New Brunswick, N. J. Where do the Scriptures sanction the custom of collecting pastor's salary and money for church expenses on the Sabbath?

Nowhere explicitly. We find nothing in the New Testament, as to the mode of worship or the observance of Sunday, corresponding with the minute rules and regulations in the Old Testament. This custom of collections and others appertaining to Christian worship grew as the need arose. After all, there is no difference in principle between collecting the money from the people on Sunday and their laying by them in store on that day, which the Apostle enjoined the Corinthian Christians to do (1 Cor. 16: 2.)

E. Clarke, Scranton, Pa. Is it wrong to preach a lecture on Temperance from the pulpit?

Certainly not. You must not forget, however, that only a part of your work is done when you have induced the drunkard to sign the pledge. You should not relax your efforts till you have led him to Christ and he has experienced the change of heart which will keep him steadfast. The minister's duty is to preach the Gospel, and it may be that while you are preaching temperance, some anxious soul among your hearers may be needing to know the way of salvation. The sermon or lecture on temperance should have in it a clear statement of the Gospel, which you can easily introduce as higher ground to be reached by the total abstainer.

Carrie Oldham, Belfast, Me. Is it wrong for church members to dance, go to theatre or opera, or attend card parties?

Modern dancing tends to deprave rather than improve. It may be affirmed that those amusements that partake of excitement or dissipation, that involve late hours, promiscuous acquaintance, vain personal display, and the awakening of doubtful emotions, are objectionable, and especially so where church members are concerned. A follower of Christ will do well to avoid all amusements that are obviously stumbling-blocks and hindrances to spiritual progress. The ball-room and the gaming-table have ruined thousands, but we have no record of a single soul that has ever been helped by them or a single heart made truly better and happier. (See Rom. 8: 5-9

The Venezuelan Difficulty.

OUR government is apparently taking a more decided stand in the dispute between Venezuela and England than any of its predecessors have done. Both Secretaries Gresham and Frelinghuysen declined to champion Venezuela's cause, and Secretary Bayard contented himself with offering the good offices of the United States to promote an amicable settlement. Secretary Olney, however, has reached the conclusion that the Monroe Doctrine is involved in the question, and has formally notified England of the fact. The Monroe Doctrine is a declaration that the United States is opposed to, and will resist, any European government acquiring new possessions on the American continent, and England contends that it does not apply to the question in dispute, inasmuch as the strip of territory to which she says claim has long belonged to her. The real facts are difficult to understand, as the strip of barren mud flats, being considered practically worthless, was never accurately defined. Venezuela cared nothing for it, and no attempt was made to settle the boundaries of the strip. Now, however, that gold has been found there in such quantities that it is thought an annual product of two million dollars a year may be exacted from it, the question of boundaries becomes one of importance. England had the boundary defined unofficially on her own account in 1840 by Dr. R. H. Schomburk, but it does not appear that Venezuela accepted the line, nor was England pledged to it by treaty. England has hitherto insisted that she has an indefeasible right to the territory up to the Schomburk line, but it is willing to submit her claims of territory beyond it to arbitration. The dispute has taken an acute form through the demand of England for reparation for injuries inflicted on certain police officials and for molesting her commerce. The position of our government in relation to the quarrel is one of extreme delicacy. Toward Venezuela as an American power and as the weaker of the contestants, our sympathies naturally go forth, but it is important to ascertain if her claim is just before championing her cause. Sympathy must not becloud our judgment. It may be hoped that our Government will be wisely guided in its policy. While there is a blessing assured to the peacemaker, it must be remembered that there is a warning against officious interference in the quarrels of others. The wise king wrote:

He that passeth by and meddleth with strife that belongeth not to him is like one that taketh a dog by the ears. Prov. 26: 17.

Why the Organ was Silent.

An organ-builder discussing recently the various methods employed for supplying an organ with wind, related an incident which illustrated the inconvenience of one method. He said that in a church at Binghampton, N. Y., the organ bellows is driven by a water motor supplied from the city water works. On one Easter Sunday preparations had been made for an elaborate musical service. The congregation, however, was astonished when in the middle of one of the finest passages, the great organ was suddenly stricken dumb. The residue of the service was consequently shorn of its beauty. The next day an investigation was made, and it was found that the stoppage was due to a strange cause. An eel pumped up from the depths of the Susquehanna River was in the pipe that supplied the motor, shutting off the water and silencing the swelling tones of the great instrument. The service rendered by human voices was doubtless quite as acceptable to God without the organ accompaniment, if it was rendered sincerely and with the heart. Sometimes, however, the song of praise, which should continually go up to God from the believer's soul, is interrupted, and the cause of the interruption, like that of the organ, is generally due to power being excluded from the soul by the presence in the life of something of an alien nature, which should not be there—sin or unbelief.

Your iniquities have separated between you and your God. (Isa. 59: 2.)

An Immigrant's Blunder.

The subject of the intelligence that should be required of immigrants before citizenship is granted, was being discussed in a society recently, when one member cited an instance of obtuseness that came under his own observation. A station agent at Bloomington, N.J., saw a man walking on the tracks of the Lehigh Valley Railroad. On his back he carried a huge package, apparently containing household utensils as well as clothes. He seemed tired though he trudged sturdily on. He had not, however, acquired the veteran tramp's skill in walking on the ties, and his journey was evidently telling on his physical powers more than the same distance by the roadway would have done. The agent stopped him and ordered him off the track, telling him that he was liable to arrest for trespass, besides incurring the risk of being killed by a train. The man, who was a Hungarian, demurred and produced a railroad ticket, good from Jersey City to Scranton, Pa. The agent looked at him in amazement, and asked him why he was walking when he might ride. The Hungarian replied that he thought the ticket gave him only the privilege of walking over the road. His right was explained to him and the tired man delightedly boarded the first train that stopped. A similar mistake is often made by Christians, who do not avail themselves of their privileges. They toil through life bearing their burdens of care despite the fact that God has undertaken to bear all their care for them.

Casting all your care upon him; for he careth for you. (1. Pet. 5: 7.)

The New Lighthouse.

Plans are being perfected in the Government Department for the erection of a new lighthouse on the Diamond Shoal, a dangerous point jutting out into the sea seven miles beyond Cape Hatteras. This will be a work of extreme difficulty that will tax the skill of the engineering corps. It has been long delayed, owing to the decided opinion of some members of the Lighthouse Board, that it will be impossible to erect a lighthouse on the shoal, and that even if it were possible, it would be swept away by the first of the storms that have made the Cape a terror to mariners. The attempt, however, is now to be made, and a million dollars will be spent in the work. The plan contemplates a skeleton structure resting on eight great iron tubes, which are to be driven to a depth of thirty feet. They are to form a circle sixty feet in diameter, and to be of such a length that the floor resting upon them will be about fifty feet above high water. On this floor a structure of cast steel will be raised to provide quarters for the three keepers, and above will be the light and the steam siren. The lens is to be the most powerful in existence, throwing the light, which is to be electric, to a distance of twenty-three miles. The engineers believe that the plan of having the light rest on pillars, between which the winds and waves can play, promises better success than one for a solid structure that would offer more resistance to the elements. The same principle may be applied to character. The martyrs and those who have stood firm in the storms of trial and temptation, have not often been men of strong physique, but those who are firmly built on Christ and have nothing in their natures accessible to the great enemy. They are safest who, like their Master, can say:

The prince of this world . . . hath nothing in me. (John 14: 30.

THE CITY OF CARACCAS, THE CAPITAL OF VENEZUELA.

A Deluded Boy.

Parents have been advised to caution their children when they go out alone in a city against conversing with strangers. A correspondent of a daily journal mentions as an illustration of this danger an incident which occurred not long ago in New York. A boy was seen near the Staten Island ferry begging from passers-by. His manner and general appearance indicated that he was not used to begging, and the attention of a detective was called to him. The boy on being questioned, gave his name and address. He said he was trying to get a few pennies to pay his fare to Staten Island, where his parents lived. Two weeks previously he had run away from home on the suggestion of a strange man who had made his acquaintance on the boat. The man had taken an interest in him and had promised that if he would come and live with him he should have plenty of pleasure and become a rich man. He often met the man, who pressed his offer upon him whenever he saw him. Finally the boy yielded and went to live with his new friend. The man had been kind to him, but the boy soon learned what he was wanted for. He was to go into hotels and flat-houses and steal any valuables he could find. The man also showed him how to steal jewelry from stores. The boy soon realized that he had been duped. He saw that he was on his way rather to a prison than a mansion, and he took the first opportunity of leaving his employer. He showed more wisdom in quitting such a service and returning to his home than some do, who have been lured away from their Heavenly Father by the promise of pleasure and worldly success. Yet the assurance of pardon and welcome which God gives is unqualified.

I will heal their backsliding and love them freely. Hos. 14 4.

BRIEF NOTES.

The Attention of Our Readers is Directed to the holiday combination offers, with instructions and order blank on page 822 of this issue. Before making any inquiries by mail, better read the instructions, in which you will probably find that your question has been anticipated and answered.

The Bible Society Record states that the Joint circulation of the American and the British and Foreign has passed the number of 200,000,000 copies.

The China Inland Mission has now Nine hundred missionaries in China, and in the churches it has organized are four thousand communicants.

The British Inspector of Prisons in his recently issued report says that female criminality in that land is rapidly declining. During the last decade the number of women in prison has decreased forty-one per cent. There has also been a decrease in the gravity of the crimes for which they are imprisoned.

A Museum in Berlin has Secured Possession of Luther's Bible which he used in his study. Its margins are covered with notes in the Reformer's handwriting. It was printed at Bale in 1509, and is in an excellent state of preservation.

An Evangelistic Effort in India Like the one recently made there by Dr. Pentecost is being planned. It will be under the charge of Rev. J. Gelson Gregson, who expects to reach Calcutta by Dec. 10, and will commence his labors by holding a convention of English speaking people.

The Chinese who have been Prisoners of war in Japan were nearly all opium users. Mr. George Braithwaite writes that they gave a great deal of trouble at first by their piteous pleading for the drug. It was refused them, and they will go back to China emancipated from their thraldom.

The Salvation Army Loses a Warm friend and indefatigable worker in the death of Miss S. P. Blundell of Paris. She founded and edited two monthly periodicals of an evangelistic type which have done a great deal of good. Since she joined the Salvation Army both periodicals have been devoted to its work.

King Khama of Bhamangwato has been spending some weeks in England and has been received by the queen. London impressed him unfavorably. He said it was big and ugly. What he admired most was the fine turf of some well-kept lawns, which he thought must be moss. The thing that impressed him most was the abundance of water and the lavish use of it.

Arrangements have Already been made for the Ocean Grove Camp-meeting Sunday of 1896. The day will be August 30, and the programme will be one unprecedented in the history of the world-famous resort. In the morning the service will be conducted by an eloquent bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church; in the afternoon Dr. Russell H. Conwell of Philadelphia will preach; and in the evening Dr. Talmage, the editor of this journal, will officiate.

The Headquarters of the King's Daughters in New York have been removed from Twenty-third Street to 156 Fifth Ave.

Mr. Henry M. Stanley, Replying to a Question as to the progress of missions in Africa said: When I was at Lake Victoria Nyanza eighteen years ago there was not a missionary there. Now there are forty thousand Christian natives and two hundred churches. The natives are enthusiastic converts. They would spend their last penny to acquire a Bible.

The Statistics of the Baptist Denomination in New York State, given at the recent Convention, show that the Church property is valued at $73,174,145. There are 907 Sunday Schools containing 15,475 teachers and 124,484 pupils. The contributions for benevolent purposes during the past year amounted to $211,656.

The First Female Pastor of a Congregational Church in New England was installed recently. She is the wife of Rev. Mr. Frost of Littleton, Mass. Her husband was pastor of the Church, but his health broke down. Mrs. Frost supplied the pulpit during the first weeks of his sickness, and her sermons were so acceptable that she was invited to become permanent pastor, and she has accepted the call.

Our Government has been Invited to Join that of Great Britain in a protest to the Government of Peru against the treatment to which Protestant missionaries are subjected. The Lima authorities, instigated by the priests, recently ordered the expulsion of Messrs. Peters and Jarrett, two missionaries who had scrupulously obeyed the law and were very popular among the people of Cuzco, where they have labored with considerable success.

A Gratifying Increase in the Circulation of the Bible in Brazil is noted. Mr. Emilo Olsson, a colporteur employed jointly by the Presbyterian mission and the Valparaiso Bible Society, reports that he has sold more than twenty-five hundred Scriptures during the year, in the Spanish, English, French, German, Italian and Portuguese languages, and that they have been offered for sale in hotels, railway stations, business and private houses, hospitals and mines.

A JOURNEY UP THE NILE.

Pleasures of Sailing Past Ruined Palaces and Cities in a Nile Dahabiyeh—"The Sweetest of Waters"—Prayers on a Pyramid's Top—A Thrilling Adventure on the Nile Sands.

Written Exclusively for "The Christian Herald" by REV. W. JAY PECK, M.A.

IT was a night in March when our express train from Alexandria drew its heavy load of tourists into the principal station at Cairo—the Grand. Evidently all the modes of locomotion in the city were in waiting outside for the use of passengers. Awaiting our arrival were sleek Arab drivers, with fine carriages, prancing steeds, donkeys with fantastic saddles, donkey boys, shouting and fighting for a customer, guides, dragomen, vociferous and cruel, camel-drivers, and patient-eyed "ships of the desert." The confusion of the Oriental city was that of a modern Babel.

REV. W. JAY PECK.

A Nubian porter seized our heavy luggage and fastening it with a rope to his back and forehead, swiftly bore it from the car. An Arab dragoman took possession of our persons. We were soon whirling towards the Ezbekah, not however till a "backsheesh" had been given to the conductor, to the porter and to a black man with powerful lungs who had called up our carriage. Afterward, a like present was given to the driver, and to his boy who took the baggage to our rooms.

Cairo was crowded with many visitors. The only room available in six hotels was on the roof of the Grand Hotel Metropole. It was a severe climb. The room was one hundred and one steps from the pavement. There Ibrahim deposited our things and there we staid a full month. From there we started on our Nile journey.

The first trip up the Nile presents such a succession of entertainment, that the days are too short and the nights too long. You do not wish to read, or talk; only to watch the variety of river life. At morning or night the ferry-boats are filled with fellahin, going home to their mud-built huts. They wait in crossing the river for the lazy ferrymen. As you sail past you see them lying under the tall palm trees on the river bank, repeating the Koran, talking or praying.

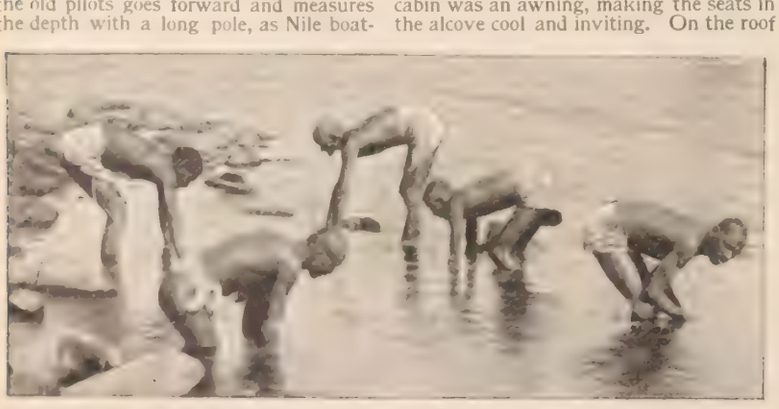
When we reach shallow places, one of the old pilots goes forward and measures the depth with a long pole, as Nile boatmen doubtless did in Moses' time, as pictured in the hieroglyphs. Sometimes we meet a rich barge of well-dressed Moslem ladies and gentlemen, aboard some pleasure-boat; again, a steamer goes by, followed by a native boat, loaded with grain or hay. It is a river of utility and pleasure, as seen by its shapely craft and its rude native boats. The natives find in their boats plenty of hard work, and the tourists much happiness. Constantly, as the bends of the river are passed, other boats appear. At some places the tall Egyptian masts look like a forest. The sail in that climate is delicious, the stillness, the repose, the freshness of the air from the far Abyssinian snow-clad mountains being exceedingly grateful.

As the stars were creeping out, we rounded a bend in the river, and there lay before us the great plain by the site of Homer's hundred-gated city. Not a gate is standing; desolation holds the sceptre now. We looked over the ruins where warriors fought, kings reigned, and palaces were once full of gay life and splendid pomp. Now all is oblivion.

Next morning I witnessed a sunrise from the ruins of the temple of Luxor. After seeing it I did not wonder that here the sun was once worshiped. A few crimson streaks shot up behind the mountains to my left. Soon the sun poured its flood of light over the fields, rich in ripening grain. It made the Nile to blush crimson, till it was like a river of gold. Every ray was a sheaf of light, bathing in strange glory, Rameseion, the temple of Medinet-Aboo, the Hills of the Tombs, the Colossi and the twin Obelisks of Karnak.

Later, in the great hall of Karnak, we saw as beautiful a sunset. It bathed those vast columns in bewitching light, making them look like gleaming sentinels of fading ruins.

Boat-life on the Nile is usually passed in a slow and stately sailing-craft, the dahabiyeh. The choice place on board is the alcove near the cabin entrance, with ample divans on which to recline and drink in the ever-changing view on either bank. There is also a cabin for reading and writing, and for the entertainment of friends. In front of our cabin was an awning, making the seats in the alcove cool and inviting. On the roof of the upper deck was a retired promenade, where the view was not obstructed by the muddy banks which rise twenty or thirty feet above the surface of the water, except in time of inundation. That particular promenade was the favorite of the young people on moonlight evenings.



NATIVE FISHERMEN IN THE NILE SHALLOWS.

Our crew was composed of Arabs and Nubians, the latter decidedly athletic and the finest types of physical manhood I ever saw. It was a sight to see ten or a dozen of them bend to the oar and by their harmonious rowing send the dahabiyeh through the water at a fine rate of speed. They moved like a living machine. Of course, the journey is made more quickly by steamers, and indeed most tourists travel by mail or special steamers; yet for luxury there is nothing in any waters quite equal to the Nile dehabiyeh.

We cannot wonder that a river, that is at times so vast, always so refreshing, and which has made Egyptian history, should be regarded by the natives with spontaneous love and enthusiasm, not to say devotion. The waters are muddy, but to their eyes, beautiful. They call them the "sweet waters." After drinking I was asked: "Are you an American?" "Yes." "Do you have good water in your land? It is not so sweet as the Nile, is it? Do not you love this water? Taste it. Is it not very sweet?"

A COOL RESTING-PLACE AT A NILE FERRY.

I really became quite fond of it; it did taste sweet. I love the Nile, its scenery and its waters.

The natives in summer are fond of bathing, but they are not good swimmers. They like diving and wading in the water that supplies Cairo, Port Said and Alexandria with what they wish to drink, besides ardent spirits. Purifying itself by flowing over thousands of acres of sand, it is a cooling and healthful drink, in spite of advice by hotel-keepers who wish to sell strong drinks.

A few miles from the river Nile are the hills of Mokattam and quarries of Masara. Here, in the bowels of a rocky ridge, were dug the immense blocks used in building the Pyramids. We visited Cheops' Pyramid and, after a rest on the side of the Pyramid, I began the climb to the top, or rather, I allowed myself to be hoisted, shoved, pushed, tossed football-fashion, up the stony shelves. The day was warm, and I waxed hot. Half-way up, we all sat down on the beetling edge of an ærial shelf, to catch our breath. An Arab who had escorted Mark Twain up, and who claimed to be a doctor, said I was red in the face and would be sick. He then seized one leg and rubbed it unmercifully, after which he charged me two and a-half piasters. He rubbed its mate for the same sum. I was lame for four days afterward.

The muezzin had called the hour of prayer. At the top we were in sight of God, but far from men. How impressive was then the scene. The Moslems all turned their dusky faces towards Mecca; they straightened their slight forms; their lips moved; their bodies swayed back and forth till their faces were bent to the rock and their brows touching its roughness. They prayed in the blazing sun till the perspiration stood out on their brows like beads and fell on the stones. Back and forth, swaying, swaying praying, praying. Whenever I think of the Pyramids, I shall see those swaying forms in the act of prayer. It certainly was a rebuke to prayerless Christians.

THE CITADEL OF CAIRO.

On the way down I asked one, "Do you often pray?" "Yes, five times a day." "Does it do you any good? Are you benefited?" "Yes; my soul lives on prayer." "What do you ask in your prayer?" was my next question. "In the first part of my prayer, I praise Allah for his glory and existence. I praise him for his goodness to me. I confess my weakness and wrong deeds. I ask him to take away my evil. I ask him to prosper me and let me reach heaven and its joys."

The doorway of Cheops' Pyramid was so small, we had to go down on all-fours to enter. Above the doorway is a solid rock. Two Arabs backed down the decline. Two others followed us closely as we went in. A little distance further we approached a well into which the guide dropped a stone that fell into darkness.

We entered a room seventeen feet wide and twice as long—the famous "Chamber of the Kings." A royal mummy might have occupied that empty stone box. Suddenly the guides extinguished their lights; mine had already gone out. They did this doubtless to extort a bigger backsheesh. I longed for daylight, and in those few moments I realized something of the nature of the Plague of Darkness.

Out on the sands near the Sphinx one day we saw a couple of suspicious-looking Arabs, who demanded money. Unfortunately they had caught sight of some gold in our purses, and their cupidity was aroused. Foolishly, we had refused the services of a guide. We whipped up our donkeys as fast as we could over the heavy sands, when suddenly a stealthy step was by my side, and the youngest and tallest Arab made straight for me. Flight on that donkey was impossible from those fleet-footed robbers of the desert. By the time he had reached me, I had sprung from the saddle. He seized my left shoulder, and with a fiendish look, said something I did not understand. The other Arab was at that instant trying to drag my friend, the doctor, from his donkey. I saw it was high time to act.

> Ours not to reason why,
> Ours not to make replies;
> Ours but to do or—die.

By a quick movement I freed myself from his grip, and suddenly and unexpectedly dealt him a blow that sent him reeling into the sand. Meanwhile, the doctor, making a club of a strong-handled umbrella, and standing up in the stirrups, had put the other fellow to flight. Whether it was fate, or pluck, or the daylight that scared them, they fled; to us at least it was a victory, even if we could not tell how it was won. As with Napoleon, the Pyramids had looked upon our battle-field and we were content. At the hotel we were congratulated on our narrow escape.

In my next letter I will tell you of my visit to the Nile's ruined cities.

The Christian Herald for 1896.

EVERY year records a marked improvement in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The labors of its ever-popular Editor, Dr. Talmage, the travels of Marion Harland who visited Palestine and Syria especially for the benefit of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers, the effective work of the late and never-to-be forgotten Dr. A. J. Gordon, Mr. Sankey's charming music, Margaret E. Sangster's intensely interesting weekly contributions, Rev. C. H. Mead's pathetic stories, Dr. MacArthur's sterling addresses, and a thousand and one other attractions all contributed in the past to make THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the brightest and the best and the most popular family weekly paper in the world.

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

But this year greater things are in store for our readers. The brilliant past is to be outdone over and over again in the magnificent programme prepared for the next twelve months. Negotiations have been happily consummated that will result in an array of literary, musical and artistic attractions never before equalled in the history of this paper.

Dr. Talmage, who has been called to a pastorate in the Capital City of the Nation, will devote more time and more attention to his journalistic efforts in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, than was possible for him to do in many a year. The leading events of the day will receive at his hands, terse, epigrammatic treatment, made all the more interesting and potential through his closer contact with many of the foremost statesmen at our nation's Capitol.

B. J. FERNIE.

Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster, whose unusually attractive short stories have often awakened new and holier longings in the hearts of hundreds of thousands of readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, will contribute to each and every issue during 1896.

REV. JOSEPH COOK, L.L.D.

Rev. C. H. Mead, the author of "His Royal Highness," and many other sweet tales that have endeared him to the hearts of his multitudinous admirers, will write during the coming year exclusively for our columns, and many a rare treat from his pen is in store for our readers.

Rev. J. B. Hawthorne, the sturdy orator of the South whose addresses never fail to reach the heart, but upon his entering third year with us, and will continue our columns to speak uncertain sound to the myriads who look forward with an ever increasing interest to his eloquent, helpful and forceful utterances.

IRA D. SANKEY.

Ira D. Sankey, whom we all love, and whose peerless Gospel songs have melted multitudes, will every week, as in the past, make glad the hearts of our music-loving readers with sweet, charming strains composed by himself or some other musical genius, that will make melodious many happy homes from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

REV. DR. TALMAGE, SENIOR EDITOR

Joseph Cook, now thousands of miles away from home on his tour around the world, will resume his articles in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD on his return, and our readers may confidently look forward to contributions of surpassing interest in the early year.

REV. C. H. MEAD.

Ex.-U. S. Senator, W. H. Blair, for many years the foremost champion of Education, Temperance and Freedom in the United States, begins in this issue a series of contributions that will command the respect and the admiration of all thinking men and women.

Dr. MacArthur, the pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, New York, the leading church of his denomination, will be ably represented in our columns from time to time, and very few contributions will receive closer or more conscientious attention.

Drs. B. J. Fernie and Geo. H. Sandison, who for many years have been associated with Dr. Talmage in the editorial management of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and whose portraits appear on this page, have recently concluded arrangements for an additional series of novel and attractive features during the coming twelve months which will enable THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to outdo all the glorious achievements of its illustrious past.

HENRY M. BLAIR.

A series of articles of remarkable interest will be those contributed by Mr. W. W. Howard, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Commissioner to Armenia, who, at the time of this writing, is in the very midst of that unhappy and destitute country, where hundreds of thousands of Christians are suffering all the horrors of martyrdom rather than forsake the religion of their forefathers. Mr. Howard, who is an eminent journalist, and a fearless explorer, went to Armenia for the purpose of organizing a Relief Committee for the distribution of such funds as THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers feel disposed to contribute for the relief of their unfortunate and suffering brethren, located in the land supposed to have been the site of the Garden of Eden, and which contains Mt. Ararat, from the top of which Noah caught his first glimpse of a resurrected world.

REV. R. S. MACARTHUR, D.D.

GEO. H. SANDISON.

And now, last but not by any means least, comes our genial artist, Mr. Albert Hencke, whose magic brush will enable us week after week to portray in beautiful colors many of the most interesting phases of Christian activity, in this country and elsewhere. Thus, for the first time in the history of religious journalism will the American people have an opportunity of being brought practically face to face with the scenes of which they have frequently heard in the past with almost consuming interest, but upon which, thus far, they have never been permitted to gaze.

We have spent many months in its most careful preparation, with a view to meeting all the requirements for a splendid and complete Home Library. The books that comprise it are of such an entertaining and helpful nature, that everybody, whatever his station in life, must derive unalloyed benefit from their perusal. Every member of the family has been conscientiously considered, and young and old will find in this LIBRARY a continuous round of surpassing attractions. Ten books, every one pure and elevating, charmingly written, and very handsomely bound in Rich Silk Cloth, with artistic gilt designs, constitute, indeed, a premium unparalleled.

* * * * *

This magnificent LIBRARY is contained in an exceptionally attractive book-case, specially designed for it, lined inside with imported marbleized material, and covered with the same rich silk cloth as is used on the books. Altogether, a more charming set of books cannot be found anywhere, and wherever this collection is placed it will prove a pleasing ornament and a veritable treasure that will reflect credit on the refined literary taste and good judgment of its fortunate possessor.

* * * * *

When they are packed for shipment—and we prepay all charges—they are placed, the case and all, in a stout, wooden box, and securely fastened so as to ensure their safe undamaged delivery. Always give your NEAREST EXPRESS OFFICE when ordering, and also, the name of the express company.

* * * * *

Permit us, dear reader, to impress forcibly upon you the desirability of prompt action. Our supply is fixed and we cannot increase it in time for the holiday season. If, after reading the description of these books contained in the adjoining columns, you feel that you want this Library, do not delay, but act at once, for prompt action is the safe-guard against disappointment. Remember, we send the Library to one address and the Paper to another, if so desired.

1. AROUND THE TEA TABLE, by T. DeWitt Talmage, D. D., LL. D.

Everybody knows that Dr. Talmage is a remarkably able author, and that everything he writes is well worth reading. "Around the Tea Table" is one of his most charming books. It contains over 300 pages. Never has its famous author done better work. There is not a family circle within the length and the breadth of this great land that will not find this delightful volume an unfailing source of pleasure and profit.

2. BOOK OF GOLDEN DEEDS, by Charlotte M. Yonge.

The grand, the noble, the heroic, the self-sacrificing deeds recorded in this ever-popular book will command the admiration of all people at all times, in every land under the sun. Such stories as these,—and there are many of them in this volume,—are calculated to incite us to higher and nobler achievements, while the wide range of thrilling incidents will ensure almost breathless interest from the beginning to the very end.

3. READINGS AND RECITATIONS FOR WINTER EVENINGS, by B. J. Fernie, Ph. D.

There is no end of books of this kind, but, alas! how few there are that can honestly claim the distinction of being particularly choice. Dr. Fernie, in this volume, has succeeded in combining the patriotic, the thrilling, the humorous, the pathetic and the poetic in such a masterly fashion, that not a single selection will admit of even the slightest adverse criticism. It is the best compilation of its kind, culled from the most famous authors of all ages and all nationalities.

4. GOLDEN TREASURY FOR THE CHILDREN OF GOD, by C. H. Von Bogatzky.

Generations may come and generations may go, but this immortal work will live to charm and to comfort the faithful children of God as long as language remains the vehicle of thought. For every day in the year, Scriptural bread is provided in a most helpful and attractive form for those who long to hold sweet communion with their Maker, and to meditate on his infinite goodness and mercy to all mankind. May God be pleased to bless this book to the good of every never-dying soul seeking to rise and to move heavenward!

5. A BUDGET OF CHRISTMAS TALES, Chas. Dickens and others.

Gather around the family table, and read aloud these Christmas tales. Shall we ever tire of them? How we long to read and re-read them, and though we read them ever so often they are forever new. It will prove an uplift to the family life to listen to these sweet stories so well told, so pure, and so conducive to the development of all that is noble and grand in human nature. If you would know how to be truly happy, and how to make other hearts glad, read this volume, and learn from others who have succeeded in doing both.

6. HOW TO GET ON IN THE WORLD, by Major A. R. Calhoun.

The aim of every man and woman is to make a success of life. Most people have the stuff in them necessary to make successful men and women, but they do not know how to apply it or to employ it so as to make it tell. Such a book as Major Calhoun has prepared, points out opportunities, plants seed-thoughts, offers suggestions, and leads the reader to see avenues of usefulness which but for this volume might have forever remained undiscovered by him.

7. CAPITAL STORIES BY AMERICAN AUTHORS, by Nathaniel Hawthorne and others.

There must be some diversion if there is to be health and strength, and happy the man, woman or child who knows how to take it innocently. Such a book as this affords the purest and most elevating diversion known. It improves the mind, cultivates an excellent literary taste, and relieves the strain of too much concentration. Read this volume by all means. You will be the better for having done so, and you will also find yourself stronger for the healthy diversion it will afford you.

8. HANDBOOK FOR AMERICAN CITIZENS, by Henry Mann.

Ignorant patriotism is often more harmful than helpful. Intelligent patriotism always tells to the advantage of the citizen and his country. There are thousands of things which every American patriot should know, and the most important of these have been very deftly arranged by a master-hand in this very instructive, interesting and thoroughly patriotic volume. Let old and young place this book next to their Bible, and make a careful study of both, and, thus fit themselves for citizenship here below as well as for the Eternal City, whose Builder and Maker is God.

9. THE CHILDREN'S PORTION, by Robert W. Shoppell.

One of the loveliest books ever sent forth to entertain and edify youth. Not a "baby book," nor a primer, but a volume of the choicest literature for young people, drawn from every conceivable source, and from every land where children live and authors aim to serve them. The reading of these unusually interesting 300 pages will prove an infinite delight to all young people, and to all old people with young hearts.

10. PARLOR AMUSEMENTS AND SOCIAL ETIQUETTE; or How to Amuse and How to Behave, G. H. Sandison, A. M., Ph. D.

"All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy." Give the young folks by all means a chance to have lots of innocent fun at home, and depend upon it they will not seek it elsewhere. No matter how heavy the atmosphere of your home has been in the past, give the young folks Dr. Sandison's book, and peals of laughter and whole tons of pure mirth and jollity will brighten things up in short order, and bring sunshine and life to the surroundings, and smiles to the faces and joy to the hearts of old and young.

The "How to Behave" part is just the very thing every well-regulated household requires. Our social opportunities are none too many, and yet these few are limited by a sense of embarrassment born of doubt as to what constitutes proper deportment under certain circumstances to which we are comparative strangers. We fear we may make some mistake that would tend to publicly humiliate us, and therefore we decline to accept the opportunity rather than run this risk. Get this book by all means. It will help you over innumerable difficulties, and the simple rules it gives governing the various social functions will enable you to enjoy with a huge relish what heretofore has been a source of fear and apprehension. You need it. Your sons need it. Your daughters need it.

Our readers will agree with us that this is a magnificent array of attractive books, wide in scope, pure in tone, elevating in character. Never did any premium afford us such intense satisfaction as this one, and none will make for us more enthusiastic friends.

* * * * *

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is an exponent of practically-applied Christianity, and one of the most important phases of our work is the putting of pure literature into the hands of the people, and thus supplanting that which is base, vile, and corrupt. We have actually expended hundreds of thousands of dollars in the past five years on this line, and we believe that the direct good accomplished by the million volumes which by the end of this present year will have been distributed by us in one way or another, has made this investment profitable from more standpoints than one.

* * * * *

While we have made very ample provision to meet all the demands, we fear some through delaying too long will have to be disappointed. A few months ago we published another attractive premium offer, and so numerous were the orders that we were actually compelled to return thousands — literally thousands — unfilled. It was a very unpleasant task, and though the loveliest kind of a letter accompanied the remittance, we know that many felt sorely disappointed. Now we hope you will not hesitate too long. It would be too bad to get your money back under these circumstances, no matter how kind and pleasant the letter that tells you of your disappointment. Better a month too early than a day too late.

* * * * *

Remember, we send THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, the most attractive, the most popular, and the purest family weekly paper, printed in beautiful colors, and issued 52 times in a year, for one whole year, and this marvelously attractive LIBRARY of Ten Volumes, and book-case securely packed in a strong wooden box, and delivered safe and undamaged, with all Charges Prepaid, for only $3 for both the paper and the books.

Every one of these Beautiful Books makes a very Attractive Holiday Gift. Hence, by Sending $3.00 you get THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for a Whole Year and Ten Appropriate Christmas Gifts. Better be prompt in Ordering, and be Sure to State Nearest Express Office and NAME of Company, if possible. The Library may be Sent to one Address and the Paper to another. Address,

Job submitteth himself to God. PSALMS, 1, 2. Blessedness of the godly
4 Hear, I beseech thee, and I will speak: I [d] will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me.
5 I have [e] heard of thee by the hearing of the ear: but [f] now mine eye seeth thee.
6 Wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes.
7 ¶ And it was so, that after the LORD had spoken these words unto Job, the LORD said to Él'i-phăz the Tē'man-īte, My wrath is kindled against thee, and against thy two friends: for ye have not spoken of me the thing that is right, as my servant Jōb hath.
8 Therefore take unto you [g] now seven bullocks and seven rams, and [h] go to my servant Jōb, and offer up for yourselves a burnt offering; and my servant Jōb shall pray [i] for you: for [2] him will I accept: lest I deal with you after your folly, in that ye have not spoken of me the thing which is right, like my servant Jōb.
9 ¶ So Él'i-phăz the Tē'man-īte and Bĭl'dăd the Shu'hite and Zō'phar the Na'ămath-ite went, and did according as the LORD commanded them: the LORD also accepted [3] Job.
10 And the LORD turned the captivity of Jōb, when he prayed for his friends:

also the LORD [4] gave Jōb twice [j] as much as he had before.
11 Then came there unto him all his [k] brethren, and all his sisters, and all they that had been of his acquaintance before, and did eat bread with him in his house: and they bemoaned him, and comforted him over all the evil that the LORD had brought upon him: every man also gave him a piece of money, and every one an earring of gold.
12 So the LORD blessed [l] the latter end of Jōb more than his beginning: for he had fourteen [m] thousand sheep, and six thousand camels, and a thousand yoke of oxen, and a thousand she asses.
13 He had also seven sons and three daughters.
14 And he called the name of the first, [5] Jĕ-mī'mà; and the name of the second, [6] Kĕ-zī'à; and the name of the third, [7] Kĕr'en-hăp'puch.
15 And in all the land were no women found so fair as the daughters of Jōb: and their father gave them inheritance among their brethren.
16 After this [n] lived Jōb an hundred and forty years, and saw his sons, and his sons' sons, even four generations.
17 So Jōb died, being old and full of [o] days.

PSALM 1.
Happiness of the godly, misery of the wicked.
BLESSED [a] is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the [1] ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful.
2 But his delight is in the law of the LORD; and in his law doth he meditate day and night.
3 And he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season; his leaf also shall not [2] wither; and whatsoever he doeth shall [b] prosper.
4 The ungodly are not so: but are like the chaff which the wind driveth away.
5 Therefore the ungodly shall not stand in the judgment, nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous.
6 For [c] the LORD knoweth the way of the righteous: but the way of the ungodly shall perish.
PSALM 2.
Kingdom of Christ; 10 Kings and judges exhorted to accept of it.

PSALM 3.
Security of God's protection.
A Psalm of Dā'vid, when he fled from Āb'sa-lōm his son.

1 LORD, [a]how are they increased that trouble me! many are they that rise against me.
2 Many there be which say of my soul, There is no help for him in God. Sē'lah.
3 But thou, O LORD, art a shield [1]for me; my glory, and [c]the lifter up of mine head.
4 I cried unto the LORD with my voice, and he heard me out of his holy hill. Sē'lah.
5 I laid me down and slept; I awaked; for the LORD sustained me.
6 I will not be afraid of ten thousands of people, that have set themselves against me round about.
7 Arise, O LORD; save me, O my God: for thou hast smitten all mine enemies upon the cheek bone; thou hast broken the teeth of the ungodly.
8 Salvation [c]belongeth unto the LORD: thy blessing is upon thy people. Sē'lah.

PSALM 4.
...ys for audience. 6 Man's happiness in God's favour.
To the chief Musician on Nĕg'ī-nōth. A Psalm of Dā'vid.

1 Answer me when I call, O God of my righteousness: thou hast enlarged me when in distress; [2]have mercy upon me, and hear my prayer.
2 O sons of men, how long will ye turn my glory into shame? how long will ye love vanity, and seek after leasing? Sē'lah.
3 But know that [a]the LORD hath set apart for himself him that is godly: the LORD will hear when I call unto him.
4 Stand in awe, and sin not: commune with your own heart upon your bed, and be still. Sē'lah.
5 Offer the sacrifices of righteousness, and put your trust in the LORD.
6 There be many that say, Who will show us any good? LORD, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us.
7 Thou hast put gladness in my heart, more than in the time that their corn and their wine increased.
8 I will both lay me down in peace, and sleep: for thou, LORD, only makest me dwell in safety.

PSALM 5.
...ss not the wicked. 7 David prays ...to God to guide him.
To the chief Musician upon Nĕ-hi-lōth. A Psalm of Dā'vid.

1 Give ear to my words, O LORD, consider my meditation.
2 Hearken unto the voice of my cry, my King, and my God: for unto thee will I pray.
3 My voice shalt thou hear in the morning, O LORD; in the morning will I direct my prayer unto thee, and will look up.
4 For thou art not a God that hath pleasure in wickedness: neither shall evil dwell with thee.

1 Or, Jemini.

5 The [c]foolish shall not stand [1]in thy sight: thou hatest all workers of iniquity.
6 Thou shalt destroy them that speak leasing: the LORD will abhor [2]the bloody and deceitful man.
7 But as for me, I will come into thy house in the multitude of thy mercy: and in thy fear will I worship [d]toward [3]thy holy temple.
8 Lead me, O LORD, in thy righteousness because of [4]mine enemies; make thy way straight before my face.
9 For there is no [5]faithfulness [c]in their mouth; their inward part is [c]very wickedness; their throat is an open sepulchre; they flatter with their tongue.
10 [c]Destroy thou them, O God; let them fall [2]by their own counsels; cast them out in the multitude of their transgressions; for they have rebelled against thee.
11 But let all those that put their trust in thee rejoice: let them ever shout for joy, because [11]thou defendest them: let them also [c]that love thy name be joyful in thee.
12 For thou, LORD, wilt bless the righteous; with favour wilt thou [11]compass him as with a shield.

PSALM 6.
David's complaint of his sickness.
To the chief Musician on Nĕg'ī-nōth [1]upon Shĕm'ī-nĭth. A Psalm of Dā'vid.

1 O LORD, rebuke me not in thine anger, neither chasten me in thy hot displeasure.
2 Have mercy upon me, O LORD; for I am weak: O LORD, [a]heal me; for my bones are vexed.
3 My soul is also sore vexed: but thou, O LORD, [b]how long?
4 Return, O LORD, deliver my soul: oh save me for thy mercies' sake.
5 For [c]in death there is no remembrance of thee: in the grave who shall give thee thanks?
6 I am weary with my groaning; [2]all the night make I my bed to swim: I water my couch with my tears.
7 Mine eye is consumed because of grief; it waxeth old because of all mine enemies.
8 Depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity; for the LORD hath heard the voice of my weeping.
9 The LORD [d]hath heard my supplication; the LORD will receive my prayer.
10 Let all mine enemies be ashamed and sore vexed: let them return and be ashamed suddenly.

PSALM 7.
1 David prays against the malice of his enemies, professing his innocence: 10 by faith he sees his defence, and decides their ruin edet praises.
a Shig-gā'ion of Dā'vid, which he sang unto the LORD, concerning the [1]words of Cūsh the Bĕn'ja-mīte.

O LORD my God, in thee do I put my trust: save me from all them that persecute me, and deliver me:

TO RECLAIM ERRING GIRLS.

A Haven of Shelter Opened for them by the New York Rescue Band — The Girls' Club and Industrial Home and its Blessed Work.

ONE of our modern problems is how to reach certain classes of the community which do not seem to be within the range of the Churches. One of the most prominent organizations which has been quietly working for several years in Mulberry Bend and in Chinatown, is the New York Rescue Band. In the latter place, through its mission at No. 17 Doyer street, just enlarged to double its former capacity, it is doing a great work among the erring girls who frequent this section. This band is composed of forty or fifty consecrated men and women who give of their time several hours regularly weekly, visiting the erring and the sick, and seeking lost souls.

Among the members of the New York Rescue Band, several have been working for years privately, in bands of two or three, among the medium and upper class girls in what is known as the "Tenderloin District" and have been the means of reclaiming a large number of the girls, many of whom are educated and refined, of helping them out of their sinful lives and fitting them, by an appropriate industrial education, for earning their living respectably. Naturally, they have had in embryo many ideas that could be concreted into such a rescue home as would only be appropriate for dealing with this special class of girls. It has been the subject of much prayer and conference private- ly, and one of the most singular features about it was that different workers, without conference upon the matter, seemed to voluntarily agree that Third avenue and Fourteenth street was the best locality for founding such a home.

The Girls' Club and Industrial Home has at last been opened at 208 and 210 East Fourteenth street. In the work of preparation, one step led to another, until finally a definite offer was made by a Christian worker to the present superintendent, of $7,500 for five years' rent, if he would oversee the carrying out, under the roof, of the same methods that had been putting into practice privately, to reach the better class of erring women by uplifting them socially, spiritually, physically, and industrially. As the offer was made by an active business man, it meant the surrender of all social ties, and a great physical strain on a few consecrated workers, as this class of rescue-work is most successfully carried on from 10 P. M. till daylight. But the trust has been accepted, with confidence in God for its success.

These houses were accordingly taken in May last. They are in the heart of the section most frequented by this class of girls. With the voluntary assistance of a Christian architect the houses were thoroughly overhauled, and renovated so that they would have a refining influence as a Christian home. They were furnished anew with appropriate furniture on every floor. The first floor of No. 8 is divided into a business office, conference room, and private Chapel; the second floor consists of three social rooms which can be thrown into one, fitted up with library tables, books, magazines, floor-games and writing materials; the third floor is fitted up entirely for industrial work and the fourth and fifth floors are dormitories. At No. 210, which is connected with No. 208, the whole building has been fitted up as dormitories and is capable of accommodating 100 women. The entire district between 9th and 34th streets, and from Second avenue to Sixth avenue, is carefully districted and the location of the saloons, dives, parlor-houses and lodgings frequented by the middle and upper class of erring women is definitely ascertained. Consecrated men and women who are tactful are given certain portions of the district to visit in bands of two or three, at regular intervals, to invite this class to visit the social rooms at the Home, where is found everything belonging to an ordinary club-room that can contribute to their moral, intellectual or social welfare. There they come in contact with winning Christian women, who converse with them and, if desired, help them in their sewing. Should they manifest a desire to abandon their wicked life, the Superintendent or Matron investigates their environment and the Home physician sees that they are suitable persons to be regularly received in the Home, where they are boarded and lodged free, and taught dress-making, hairdressing, millinery, stenography, typewriting, and the use of the sewing-machine. One of the obstacles which the founders had previously met in their private work, was that this class of girls would not abandon their sinful lives for ordinary house-work as servants, many of them being educated, refined women. This and similar facts are recognized and dealt with in a broad charity that takes no account of denomination or creed, but holds to the belief that these girls can be kept firm only by being led to Jesus Christ who alone can save and keep from sin. Each evening at an appropriate hour, the workers from the street and the girls who are visiting at the Home, as well as the regular inmates, come together voluntarily into the little Chapel for family religious services, the aim being to make it a service that is longed for, rather than an infliction to be endured. Rarely does an erring girl refuse to come from the social-room to the evening service, though an hour later she may be again on the street. They have, thus far, all respected the work sufficiently to bow the knee in prayer. The Home is so conducted as not to be regarded as an institution, but a harmonious household. The table is bountiful and the social and intellectual privileges such as may be found in a refined Christian home. All the girls come in contact with Christian women who endeavor to draw them to purer living by the practical exhibit of their own lives.

A few incidents will illustrate the character of the work. The Superintendent one night, was visiting one of the largest resorts in New York—a notorious "garden" where sometimes there are over 100 erring women present during the evening. While there he was accosted by a young girl with whom he talked, and to his surprise on learning her name, discovered that she was the daughter of a business acquaintance. She had been led into a life of sin some three months before. By kind and courteous conversation, he won her confidence and her respect. When he left the place he at once went home and prepared to take a journey of 200 miles the next morning at 5 A. M. On reaching his destination he found his suspicions confirmed. The girl a few months before had been led astray, and had run away from home, and come to New York, where she was soon after discarded by her enticer. Being too proud to return, and her father having disowned her, she was now on the broad road to ruin. He found the father and pleaded the girl's cause so effectively that consent was given for her return as being after all worth saving. On his return to New York, the girl was told of the journey and its result, and was amazed when she realized that a stranger had travelled 400 miles for her welfare. She could hardly believe that he had not been paid to do such a thing. She consented to return to her home. As she was being put on the train, she said: "I have been thinking there must be some power that is greater than human that causes you to do this." She was told that her benefactor was merely trying to do what the Master himself had done for us. This practical sermon brought her to Christ and she is to-day a noble Christian girl.

Such instances might be multiplied, but one will serve as a type of many others.

"We have had girls come before us," said the superintendent, "who have been receiving as the wages of their sin fifty dollars and one hundred dollars per week, and we have kindly but firmly told them that we don't care how much money they are making, they are no better off than the girl who earns five dollars or ten dollars, because that kind of money burns in their pocket until it is gone, and we can offer them something that is sweeter and more sensible even for this life. In reaching this class of women, we endeavor to win their hearts and friendship first, and then try to show them that what inspires us to such action is the Spirit of God within us. Then we try to show them that nothing can keep them from falling away, except the power of Jesus Christ—not their human wills. Many girls who have been in our Home have said, 'We have been brought up in wealth and have had everything that we wanted in a sinful life; but we did not know there was so much real happiness and honest pleasure in doing right.' We try to impress upon them that a truly Christian man or woman is entitled to all the best of God's things and that so far as it is good for them they will get them."

THE GIRLS' CLUB AND INDUSTRIAL HOME.

THE "SOCIAL ROOM" OF THE GIRLS' CLUB AND INDUSTRIAL HOME, NEW YORK.

(Photographed Expressly for "The Christian Herald.")

There are no workers connected with the Girl's Club or the Industrial Home who are rich people. Believing that it was a work directed by God they pledged their lives and guaranteed their means to have the work practically started before asking a dollar. It has cost the founders $6,500 to furnish both houses and the rent of both together is $3,000 a year, the running expenses also being about $3,000 per year. There are forty thousand erring women in New York, and it is estimated that one thousand such women take illegitimately from the community $1,000,000 a year. Can this heavy financial drain be partly stopped and made to aid self-respecting and self-supporting lives? Friends who feel an interest in the work may help it in various ways, not merely with money but by giving the girls whatever they can of their plain sewing, dressmaking, millinery, envelope addressing stenography and typewriting. It is hoped that in a few years the Home will be partly self-supporting. Of the profit made on work done, one-third is taken for the Home, and two-thirds are passed to the girls and their assistants, for clothing and board. The managers of the Home, some of whom have been engaged in rescue work for twenty-five years, look confidently for cordial support by Christian people, who have the reclamation and spiritual welfare of the fallen girls at heart. They believe the work to be of God and that the Lord's people will rally around it in such force as to make it a potent and blessed agent for the inbringing of these frail ones—"Somebody's Daughters"—who have strayed from the fold. All who are interested in the Home will be welcomed there as visitors at any time. The officers of the Girls' Club and Industrial Home are H. A. Gould, Superintendent, and Mrs. L. R. Perry, Head Matron. The New York Rescue Band is in charge of an Executive Committee,—A. W. Dennett, President, Dr. S. E. Furry, Secretary, H. A. Gould, Treasurer.

ARMENIA PLUNGED IN SORROW.

Over 10,000 Massacred by the Turks and Kurds during the Recent Troubles—Swelling the Christian Martyr Roll—The Destitute Families.

EVERY mail from the East brings intelligence of some new and startling barbarity by the Turks against the persecuted Armenians. So intolerable has the misgovernment of the Armenian people, and indeed of the whole empire, become, that it is not surprising to learn of an almost universal belief in Constantinople, as well as in Europe generally, that a revolution is under way in which the Sultan will find many of his Moslem subjects arrayed against himself. At the present moment the whole military strength of the Empire is exerted to restore order, but in vain. The revolution against the Ottoman despotism has begun in earnest. Dispatches state that not less than ten thousand Armenian Christians have been slain in the recent massacres! This horror has aroused the whole Armenian nation as one man, to battle for its life—and the world looks on in sympathy. Even in diplomatic circles it is now conceded that the Sultan has decided on a policy of extermination. By fire, by the sword, by outrage, by cold and by starvation, his great life-task of utterly effacing the Armenian people goes on from day to day. They are Christians, these Armenians; therefore they must die; and the bloodthirsty and fanatical followers of the Prophet, after the creed and example of their forefathers, carry fire and slaughter into the defenceless Christian villages of Armenia at every opportunity. The story of the many hundreds who were butchered in cold blood at Diarbeker, Trebizond, Bitlis and Erzeroum within the last few weeks alone, is sufficient to excite the most intense indignation in every civilized community; but when it is known that, in a very great majority of cases, the poor Armenians would have been spared, had they denied Christ and accepted Islam—then the loving admiration of God's people throught the world must go out to these martyrs and their kindred. Robbed, maltreated, imprisoned, maimed, and tortured for the sake of their religion, their wives and daughters abused and abducted, their little children slain, their homes converted into a pile of smoking ruins, they had surely suffered all that it was possible for men to suffer. Yet, when the final alternative came—death or Islam—they did not quail. The women, too, as Rev. Cyrus Hamlin, the veteran missionary, recently stated in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, were equally courageous and faithful, and even amid the most frightful tortures, did not fail to call upon Hissos Nazareetsees (Jesus of Nazareth). The splendid faith of these martyrs, however, had no effect upon their cruel murderers, who are sworn to make an end of every Christian man, woman, and child in Armenia!

Our illustration on this page (from a sketch made from life by a correspondent of the Illustrated London News) furnishes a vivid idea of the Turkish method of dealing with the Armenians. This happened in the city of Trebizond, and letters received declare that no quarter was given to any Armenian by the Turks. One man who refused to give up his religion was hacked to pieces in the presence of his wife and children. Hundreds were butchered in the same way. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is enabled to give below some very significant extracts from official reports sent to the Armenian Patriarch at Constantinople, under recent date. These extracts only deal with a few districts, but they serve to indicate the condition of many other districts where terrorism prevails, and where Turkish and Kurdish murderers, pillagers, and violators have committed frightful crimes unhindered.

These lists, two of many that have come into the possession of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, read between the lines, tell a pathetic story of sorrow and suffering—within a limited territory, a series of atrocious murders, accompanied by theft, incendiarism, and crimes unnamable; "conversions" that imply horrors worse than death; the armed midnight attack on village homes; the slaughter of their defenders when they attempted to save the honor of wives and daughters, and the abduction of the women, leaving the place a shambles or a heap of smouldering ashes.

Among the survivors of the numerous massacres of 1894-95 the greatest destitution prevails. Thousands are in hiding among the mountain passes and villages near their old homesteads, where they are in danger of death from cold and starvation. Other thousands, who have lost home, protectors and friends, have struggled in from the ruined villages to Van, and still others in Moosh, Sassoun, and elsewhere, are being helped by the missionaries and by kind friends in distant lands. This help alone has been the means of averting wholesale death by starvation; yet the Sultan's officials, acting with their usual inhumanity, attempted to stop the relief work by requesting the missionaries to leave. Had they obeyed, the slaughter would have recommenced, and what the sword left alive the terribly severe Armenian winter or the lack of food would unquestionably have accomplished.

It is the belief of the Turks and Kurds that they are divinely called to cut off from the face of the earth, as far as possible, the Christians, whom they regard as "giaour," or heathen. Acting on this principle, they have given unrestrained rein to their fanatical passions, and have carried death and desolation to all parts of Armenia. Indiscriminate and wholesale slaughter of Armenians has taken place at seventeen different towns and villages within the last few months. It has been the endeavor of the officials—who were instrumental in conducting these outrages—to inflame the minds of the soldiery and of Moslems generally by circulating lying reports that the Christians had profaned the Mohammedan mosques. This never fails to arouse the fanatical fury of the sons of Islam. Then, when all is over, and when the rows upon rows of Christian corpses are hurriedly buried out of sight, such a version of the story is given to the world by the Sublime Porte as will gloss over the true facts, and make the Armenians appear to have been the aggressors. Thus, with the recent massacre of Christian natives at Diarbeker, it was claimed that the Armenians had attacked a Moslem mosque, whereas the facts, as afterward disclosed, showed the Kurds and Turks to have been the sole and intentional aggressors. The massacre began on Friday, and continued on Saturday and Sunday with insatiable ferocity. Another illustration on a smaller scale of the sort of aggression to which the Armenians have had to submit, was when eleven families of Khantag, with all their members, were announced as having embraced Mohammedanism. The truth was that the death of their defenders, the plunder of their homes, and the vile abuse they themselves underwent, left the women of those eleven families in such a condition that their conversion was of the "compulsory" character, explained in the second list printed on another part of this page.

From the beginning of the recent riots, it is estimated by well-informed authorities, that upwards of 10,000 murders have been committed in cold blood in the name of religion in Armenia. This is exclusive of the Constantinople affair, which alone cost several hundred lives. As might have been expected, the suffering among the survivors has been greatly increased in consequence. At Baiburt, about three days' distance from Erzeroum, there are probably 1000 or more persons in abject destitution, and it is the same in nearly all the neighboring villages. In and around Trebizond also the distress is very great, and relief will be extended as quickly as possible.

Noble work has been done by the American missionaries at Van from the beginning of the present distress. These godly men and women have in the past few weeks vindicated their Christian principles at the peril of their lives. In Van, Miss Kimball and Mr. and Mrs. Raynolds, and in Bitlis, Rev. Royal M. Cole and wife, Miss Charlotte E. and Mary A. C. Ely, Rev. George P. Knapp and wife, Miss Grace Knapp and Miss Alsina Knapp, all Americans, and consecrated to the work through long years of service, have been conducting relief operations. They have been the teachers, pastors and counsellors of the Armenians, and have opened among them the best schools and other educational institutions. Nearly all are engaged in aiding the distressed families and it was that fact alone that caused the Turkish officials to demand their withdrawal, in order that the homeless and destitute Armenians might be left to die. A second remittance has been sent by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Armenian Relief Fund, the money to be used in this work and to be supplemented by other amounts, as rapidly as the work progresses. It is an important matter that the relief work should be pushed forward vigorously before the highways and mountain passes are blockaded with snow and all means of access to many of the sufferers shut off for the winter. Our Relief Fund, to be effective, must have its work well in hand, with sufficient resources to accomplish substantial results within the next four weeks; otherwise the great opportunity of aiding these victims of persecution and affliction may pass unheeded. Never was a worthier cause presented for human sympathy. The oldest of Christian nations and their beautiful country—declared by all the best scriptural and geographical authorities to be the veritable site of the Eden of the Bible—have been turned into a nation of mourning and a land of sorrow and lamentation. It is always darkest before the dawn and Armenia's black night of suffering may yet have a daybreak bright with hope and promise.

But the widows and the children of the Armenian martyrs must meanwhile receive, from kindly hands and hearts in Christian lands that love and help which are denied them elsewhere, and failure which, they must inevitably perish.

That their pitiful case has indeed touched the hearts of the Lord's people in our own prosperous and peaceful country—where each family can worship under its own vine and fig-tree—is evident from the multitude of letters received by every mail, expressing the warmest sympathy for the unfortunate Armenians. There is the strongest desire among the Christians of America to hold out the hand of succor and blessing to those persecuted and homeless ones, remembering their long generations of simple fidelity to the Master and the crimson roll of the martyrs who have sealed their testimony with their lives. It is to help their widows and orphaned ones, the broken families, the scattered exiles, once happy and united, now waifs and wanderers, that Armenia appeals to her brothers and sisters in the West. Her appeal has not been in vain. The Relief Fund is swelling to noble proportions and promises to be the means under Divine blessing, of saving many lives and bringing at least some ray of hope, if not of happiness, to the saddened hearts and shattered lives of the suffering Armenian families. Every contribution to the Relief Fund sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York, will be duly acknowledged in these columns.

Winter Life in Holland.

A Country where the Ice affords Universal Enjoyment — An Every-Day Carnival on Skates — The Gatherings at "Slikkeveer."

OF late years sports on the ice have received a great impetus in the United States. Hardly a town that has not either some lake or river whereon, when the frost strikes down in earnest, the merry jingle of sleighbells or the clink of ringing skates is not heard from daylight till dusk. What with skating, tobogganing, sleighing and ice-boating, there is unfailing fund of wholesome enjoyment for all who wish a share of it.

But of all countries in the world, Holland is pre-eminently the land of the skaters. Excelling in many outdoor sports, the Hollanders are probably the finest and most graceful skaters in Europe. Every Hollander skates—at least it would almost seem so, to one who goes along the frozen canals in winter, and sees apparently the entire population of towns and villages disporting themselves on the ice. House-wives, accompanied by their children skate to market, farmers and shoppers are as much at home on the ice as though it were their natural element. Even the great dames and the rich burghers indulge in the same national winter pastime, when they do not travel in runners or sledges. And some of those sledges are odd-looking affairs, of ancient style and belonging to a period long since past. Others are built in the latest fashion, and vie in daintiness and elegance with the court sledges of the Russian nobles one sees on the Neva, or those pretty creations that can be seen gliding swiftly along on the Serpentine or the Thames in England.

Probably no other country affords such abundant skating facilities as Holland does. A network of dams, dykes, canals, sluices and water-gates. The land is flat and low; streams and canals intersect it in all directions, and it abounds in ponds and "polders," or lands that have been reclaimed from the sea or the lakes. But it is on the rivers that the great skating carnivals are to be witnessed, and they present scenes that are at once brilliant and peculiar to that country. The quaint costumes of the peasants mingle with the more fashionable attire of the citizens. The tall, gracefully-proportioned sleighs glide over the polished ice like so many swallows. On the river Maas, a short distance east of Rotterdam, is a famous skating resort, known as Slikkeveer, and it has of late years been the scene of a number of international skating contests. There is no finer place for this delightful exercise than Slikkeveer, which is shown in our illustration on this page.

While the Hollanders do not usually excel in figure-skating—an accomplishment that is difficult with the long runners on the Dutch skates—they are probably the swiftest racers on the ice, being able, on a long distance, to leave most rivals hopelessly behind. Sometimes a long string of skaters, with a pole under their arms, set a swift pace all together across the ice. Occasionally a sail is pressed into service, and with either end of it upheld by sturdy skaters, the group sweeps past before the wind with the velocity of an ice yacht or an express train. Many skaters are quite as clever in the manipulation of the ice-sail as any navigator of a yacht in a cup race, and can make rapid headway close to the wind. Altogether, skating may be said to afford one of the principal pastimes of the Hollanders.

A Memory of Childhood.

Long years ago I cried, when Inez said,
"You are no more a little girl," I grieved
To part for ever from that little girl
And all her happy world so near the ground.
It must be sad to outlive aught we love,
So I shall grieve a little for these days,
. . . . O they were sweet,
And none will come just like them.
—LONGFELLOW.

The Home Saturday Night.

On Saturday night, as we open the family paper, writes Dr. Talmage, let us catch the odor of pine, and the glance of a most delicately-tinted and beautiful autumnal leaf dropping like the sparks from a forge. Tell us of home. Let us know how wives ought to be attentive to their husbands—but never mind that. Come, O weekly visitant! into the front door with a blessing. Our week's work done, and notes paid, and accounts squared, and the hurry over, and the Sabbath near, speak a cheerful word to the desponding, a chiding word to the wandering, a soothing word to the perplexed; and help the ten thousand of the weary and foot-sore, and the hardly bestead, by the still camp-fires of life's great battle-field, to thank God that the seven days' march is over, and it is Saturday night. Before long our pens, and needles, and trowels, and yardsticks, and saws, and pickaxes will be still. With hand clasping some loved one, we will be waiting for a brighter Sunday morning than earth ever saw. Others call that waiting —Death. I call it Saturday night.

Mother-Wisdom.

Women know
The way to rear up children (to be just,)
They know a simple, merry, tender knack
Of . . . . . .
Stringing pretty words, that make no sense,
And kissing full sense into empty words,
Which things are corals to cut life upon,
Although such trifles; children learn by such Love's holy earnest in a pretty play,
And yet not over early solemnised.

A Child's Taste in Reading.

A parent ought to be constantly on the watch to suggest books that are suitable for his child's reading, writes H. Clay Trumbull, and to incite his child to an interest in those books. It is a good plan to talk with a child in advance about the subject to be treated in a book, which the parent is disposed to commend, and to tell the child that which will tend to awaken his wish to know more about it, as preparatory to handing the book to him. Reading with the child, and questioning the child concerning his reading, will intensify the child's interest in his reading, and will promote his enjoyment as he reads. And so it is that a child's taste in reading will be cultivated steadily and effectively in the right direction by any parent who is willing to do the work that is needful, and who is able to do it wisely. A child needs help in this sphere, and he welcomes help when it is brought to him. If the help be given him, he will find pleasure as well as a profit in its using; but if he goes on without help, he is liable to go astray, and to be a life-long sufferer in consequence.

The Purity of Childhood.

One of the greatest lovers of children is the Rev. Anthony W. Thorold, Lord Bishop of Winchester, who has written some very pretty and touching things regarding them, giving evidence of a close study of the conditions of childhood. He writes this inspiring paragraph, which will be read with delight by every mother.

"If our eyes are open, we presently see what children may become to us, as well as what we ought to be to them. For, in a suitable and reverent use of a great word with many meanings, children are the salvation of the race. They purify, they elevate, they stir, they instruct, they console, they reconcile, they gladden us. They are the ozone of human life, inspiring us with hope, rousing us to wholesome sacrifice. If, in the faults which they inherit, they show us the worst of ourselves, and so move us to a salutary repentance, they also stimulate our finer qualities; they cheat us of weary care; they preach to us, not so much by their lips as by their innocence; their questions set us thinking, and to better purpose than the syllogisms of philosophers; their helplessness makes us tender; their loveliness surprises us into a pure joy. To me at least, if I may say so much, a child, wherever I see it, and no matter whose it may be, is a thing of delight. These fingers tingle with a sensation of delight while I am writing about them here. My chilly friend need not have my joy if he does not believe in it; I will not force it on him, but he shall not take mine from me.

At the Thanksgiving Fire.

We are all here!
Father, mother,
Sister, brother,
All who hold each other dear;
Each chair is filled, we're all at home.
To-night let no dissension come:
It is not often thus around
Our old familiar hearth we're found.
Bless, then, the meeting and the spot;
For once be every care forgot;
Let gentle peace assert her power,
And kind affection rule the hour.
We're all, all here!
—CHARLES SPRAGUE.

FOLDED LAMBS.

IN the twilight's starry silence
I am sitting all alone,
And my heart is calling, calling
For the dear ones it has known.

And I listen as the shadows
Flit across the dewy air,
While I'm thinking of my lost ones—
For their footsteps on the stair.

Oh, they used to come at even,
And we'd gather by the hearth;
How I prized their love and friendship
As of deepest, truest worth!

Now their voices never greet me,
And I miss them everywhere;
But I miss them most at even
And their footsteps on the stair.

Then I think of God's dear mansion,
And I know they're folded there;
And perhaps they watch and listen
For my footstep on the stair.

I shall find my loved ones waiting
With a sweet, glad welcome there,
For I know they wait and listen
For my last step on life's stair.

TWO STORIES FOR BOYS.

MR. MOODY, talking with the writer a few days ago, in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD office, related a little incident illustrative of the value to the individual of a personal interest in Christian work. There was a wide difference between the attitude of a mere spectator or outsider and that of a person who had become identified with the work by "giving something or doing something." The great evangelist recently preached a sermon to an audience of prisoners. It was the Gospel of Jesus, told with his usual touching eloquence, in plain, simple words. A little lad, the son of some visitor at the jail, had been an auditor, and after the service, said to an older friend: "That was the best sermon I ever heard—it was a great sermon." Surprised at his unusual appreciation, the friend asked: "What makes you think it so good a sermon, Willie?" "Oh, so it was," insisted the boy. "You know I put a nickel in the plate." The little fellow had already learned the lesson of the value of actual contact with a good work as a means of stirring up interest and enthusiasm in the heart.

"There's another story," Mr. Moody went on, smiling, "but you may perhaps have heard it. A little fellow in London was brushing up and fixing himself at a great rate and putting an extra shine on his shoes, when another boy inquired: 'Why, where are you goin'? 'To Exeter Hall' was the surprising reply. 'Exeter Hall? what's goin' on there.' 'Foreign Missions,' came the quick answer with another rub at the toe of the left shoe. 'Oh, say! what d' you know about them? Foreign Missions, eh. When did you become interested in 'em, I'd like to know?' 'Why' said the lad, as he gave the last polishing touch and stood upright—'I gave 'em a penny last year an' I'm goin' there to see what's become of it.'

"That's the way to get young folks and other folks, too, interested in Christian work. Get them to get into personal contact—to do something and to give something and they wont be indifferent long."

Clever Dames of the Kitchen.

The Austrian lady of station who does not know how to cook, does not exist. Every detail of the cuisine she is acquainted with. A story is told of a Viennese lady, who, having neglected this branch of her education, allowed at a great dinner party which she gave, two dishes of the same color to be served in succession, a fault for which she was hardly to be forgiven!

Young ladies of good families in European capitals, do not learn the art of cooking at cooking-clubs, or from public lessons, as in America, and they rarely learn in their own kitchens. It is the custom to go to some great house—the house of a princess, or to some rich banker's—where there are famous chefs, by whom they are taught.

WANTED—A SOBER NATION!

Ex-U. S. Senator Blair Makes a Stirring Appeal to the Pulpit to Lead in a New Temperance Crusade — Organization on a National Basis Needed.

EX-UNITED STATES Senator Henry W. Blair, long known throughout the nation as the apostle of Education and Temperance Reform, has prepared a pamphlet in which he makes a powerful presentation of the whole Temperance question. The CHRISTIAN HERALD is privileged to lay before its readers a chapter from advance sheets of this pamphlet, which deals with a phase of the question that is of the utmost importance. Senator Blair would be glad to receive the names and addresses of all ministers and laymen who feel interested enough in his suggestion to express their approval. All communications should be addressed to him at Washington, D. C. He writes:

I think that any student of our history will admit that among organized bodies of men, the pulpit has been the pioneer and principal promoter of the great steps taken by our nation in civil, social and moral reform. It is the business, as well as the inclination, of the American pulpit, to be right, and to be aggressive. The pulpit was the real leader of the American people up to and through the Revolutionary War.

Giving due credit to all other men, organizations and agencies, ever since the Revolutionary War, and to-day, the pulpit has been and now is the real leader of the American people, whenever they are led toward higher and better life.

The pulpit largely inspires and controls the platform, the press, and all other agencies for good. With this power goes corresponding responsibility.

If, in the future, the Temperance Reform is to be more fortunate than in the past, there must be more general, united, and efficient action for its promotion by the pulpit than there has been in the past.

True, the pulpit has been the champion and sheet-anchor of the cause from the beginning. But very much more might be done hereafter.

The clergy of all denominations might well unite in one vast association (taking lay persons of both sexes and of all beliefs, or of no belief, if you please also,) for the prosecution of the Temperance Reform, the success of which is next to the success of godliness, and without which it is impossible to bring home to the individual man the truths of a religion which can exist only in a clear head and honest heart.

If the pulpit, regardless of denominational distinction, would unite for the promotion of this great cause, and would make [illegible] support it by regular presentation to their congregations calling for contributions to its support, until it comes to be as much a part of Christian voluntary taxation to be enforced by a sense of duty, as is the case with missionary and Bible societies and other general causes, the support of which is recognized to be obligatory upon all who [illegible] the future of the Temperance Movement would [illegible] as the [illegible] by the same eternal Word of God.

And why, since the eradication of the influence of alcohol is a condition precedent to the [illegible] I ask, is it not the first duty of the pulpit to [illegible]?

True, the clergy are nearly all in its favor, and at work for its success, but it is not looked upon generally as a cause for which they are as much responsible as for the regular preaching of the Gospel—it is a good thing, but not exactly a part of the Gospel and of Gospel work.

There is no great body of men who feel responsible for the pecuniary support of the cause of Temperance. The cause has nothing to live on but chance charity. Nobody is responsible for it. When a man pays his minister's tax, or for the support of foreign missions, he feels that he has but just kept even by discharging a duty, that he is still a sinner and needs salvation just the same.

But whatever he gives to the cause of Temperance is given right out, because of his own innate goodness, and he can claim it as so much toward salvation upon the ground of works. God had no real right to it; he is just that much ahead and can draw against the deposit when he becomes a little in debt on Christian duty.

Now, the pulpit if any power can do it, can remedy this state of things. There was a time when the churches did nothing toward foreign missions, and, of course, there were no missions. The pulpit changed all that. The clergy created the missionary societies, and preached the Christian duty of their maintenance, and now the whole world is familiar with the story of the Cross.

Six hundred millions of the race are under the control of governments founded upon the Christian faith, and it would not be many years before that faith would dominate the world if the pulpit would do for the Temperance cause what it has already done for the cause of missions at home and abroad. And the victims of intemperance are our own flesh and blood.

Surely, if charity begins at home, the Gospel ought to start there. It is impossible [illegible] support this cause without regular contributions of money. No regular income adequate to so great a work can be maintained which is not paid from a sense of duty, and unless there be an organized body of men who shall continually preach the truth as it is in the Gospel of Temperance as an integral part of the Gospel of Christ, this sense of duty will never be established in their minds, the money will never be collected, and the whole business must either fail utterly or live on at the poor dying rate of the past, in which it has been "give and take" between God and the devil.

If, then, the clergy of all denominations, or at least of some of the great ones, would take upon themselves to organize the American, or the World's Temperance Society, or, still better, would organize both, and unite such societies with international ties, in due order of development, and then would insist that they be supported like other branches of Christian work by all who profess to recognize Christian or even humanitarian obligations, I think that the most important advance movement that can be suggested would have been made.

It would imply the second step and the whole journey. I believe, too, that it would prove to be the most practical thing possible to promote the general moral and religious welfare of mankind.

Everywhere Christian effort is now stumbling over alcohol, opium, and the rest, and until these gigantic boulders are removed, the ark will sadly shake and jostle in the way. You'll never get there until you fix the road.

In such a movement the pulpit would, of course, summon laymen to their aid, and they would be important coadjutors and sometimes leaders, as in the Anti-Slavery Society; but it is, in my belief, indispensable that the great body of men who, by God's appointment and the dutiful approval and support of their fellowmen, are set apart to promote the interests of man and the glory of God, should prosecute the Temperance Reform as an integral and important part of their Christian work, and see to its pecuniary support as much as to that of any other branch for which they are responsible.

No other body of men will do it, or can do it.

Let the clergy lead in this, setting others at work, and they will find the great body of people, who can be relied upon to support that for which their profession already stands, gladly ready to take on the expense of this as a regular addition to their labor of love.

I need not say that I make this suggestion with diffidence.

But in the multiplying forms of Christian activity it has seemed to me that if the clergy would try this, they would certainly succeed.

The truth is that we do almost anything the minister asks us to do, even in these latter days.

They govern by themselves and through the press and in other ways, though less visibly, yet really as much now as they did when good old Cotton Mather held sway in the Puritan North.

Such an organization among the clergy could be initiated in their assemblies and during the summer study and Chautauqua intercourse could be largely perfected.

Within three months the American Temperance Society, organized for broad and aggressive action in every department of work that could hurt the common enemy, might be put in active operation in some central place, with branches, if they become necessary, in the different States or centres of influence, and the future of the Temperance Reform be made sure.

How much, too, that I do not think of, the young Knights of the Cross could do if they should decide to set about it. But begin now. Do not lose another year, for the harvest is the world, and it is ripe, and the laborers are few.

AN ORIENTAL FUNERAL—OBSEQUIES OF AN EMINENT CHRISTIAN AT OROOMIAH, PERSIA.

A PERSIAN FUNERAL.

Obsequies of the Brother of the Nestorian Patriarch, at Oroomiah.

MAR SHIMMON, the civil and spiritual head of the Nestorians, resides in the village of Kodchaness, in the mountains of Kurdistan. He is the spiritual overseer of all the Nestorian churches of Persia and Kurdistan. Once a year he sends one of his brothers to visit the churches of Oroomiah, for the purpose of receiving the contributions of the brethren, and also to inquire as to the condition of the church itself, and any matters laid before him by the bishops and priests.

Last winter, the Patriarch sent his brother Eshai on this important mission. Eshai was cordially welcomed by the Christian missionaries of Oroomiah. While visiting one of the churches in Oroomiah plain, he was taken sick and brought to the hospital and placed under the care of the well-known medical missionary, Dr. J. P. Cochran, where he died after a short illness. The photograph on this page, which is furnished to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD by Mr. J. Malek Yonan, of Oroomiah (a young medical missionary now in the United States completing his studies for medical missionary work in Persia) shows the funeral which took place at Charbash, a suburb of Oroomiah. In the foreground of the illustration are seen the officials of the place, the procession being led by a government band. Among the throng of distinguished persons present are the venerable and beloved Bishop, Mar Goriel, the deacons officiating at the funeral, and Dr. Oshana Badal and Kasha Shimmon, native missionary of Hamadan, and preacher to the Jews and Moslems. Dr. Cochran stands at the head of the bier, and nearby is the sister of the deceased. In the assemblage are Nestorians from different parts of the country who come to pay the last tribute of respect to their departed friend. There are also many Nestorian ladies and a number of Moslems in the gathering, who sympathize with the Nestorians and who had learned to respect the deceased. The funeral services were conducted in accordance with the rites of the ancient Nestorian Church.

The photograph is particularly interesting as affording a realistic glimpse of the manner in which funeral services are conducted by the oldest body of Christians in that part of Asia. The Nestorians live in the mountains of the Perso-Turkish frontier and on the plain of Oroomiah in Northwestern Persia. They are a kin to the Jacobites of Eastern Turkey and Mesopotamia, and are sometimes spoken of as the Assyrian Christians. The American Board and Presbyterian Board have successful missions in that country.

TRUE FRIENDSHIP.

Suggestions on the Christian Endeavor Topic for the Week Beginning December 15. Prov. 27: 9-10, 17, 19.

OUR ordinary mode of speaking of friendship does not indicate the power and influence and depth of devotion which are really included in the ideal association. True friendship calls for the exercise of the noblest qualities of human nature. Montaigne places the love of friends above even the love of brothers, or the love of husband and wife. He contends that as there is in both cases an element of necessity, a sense of duty, which does not exist in friendship, neither of them can compare with the voluntary attachment in which there is no compulsion. Solomon seems to have the same estimate, for in the chapter on which the topic is based, he advises a man in trouble to go to the house of his neighbor (which in this connection means friend) rather than to the house of his brother. David also, in lamenting over the death of Jonathan, says that their love was passing that of women. In Longfellow's beautiful poem, John Alden balances the claims of his love for the maiden with the claims of friendship, and finds the latter more weighty. "So friendship prevailed over love, and Alden went on his errand." God himself honors the word in his reference to Abraham. That noble patriarch was distinguished above all the human race by the title of "The friend of God," and the title rests on the fact of his intense reverence and the complete self-abnegation with which he yielded his beloved son, when the higher love seemed to require the sacrifice. Not even the surrender of his own life could have furnished so strong a proof that he deserved the title. The word was a favorite one with Jesus himself. In that most pathetic talk with his disciples, he said, "I have called you friends," and there was an infinite depth of meaning in the words that they did not realize till they knew all he was about to do for them. And into that sweet and tender relationship, Jesus with prophetic foresight opened wide the gate for the multitudes yet unborn, when he said, "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you."

Friendship therefore is an ideal relationship, sacred, unselfish, elevating. It is based on esteem and it calls forth the truest affection. It does not necessarily imply similarity, for often the strongest friendship exists between natures wholly unlike each other. No two men could be more dissimilar than the bold, impetuous Luther, and the gentle philosophic Melancthon, yet the two men loved each other with undying affection. The one nature was a corrective and a complement to the other, and the cause of the Reformation benefited by the association. It has often happened that such friendships have resulted in achievements that would have been impossible to either friend alone. The qualities to be derived in a friend are not of a common order. While there should be no antagonism, neither should there be a mere reflection, or an echo. He may have to administer reproof, to advise, to help in a hundred ways. Above all he must be faithful; always ready to sacrifice his own interests to advance those of his friend. To have such a friend, and to be such a friend is ennobling, elevating, consecrating. Such friendship is within the reach of all; for there is "a friend that sticketh closer than a brother."

WHO WILL MAN THE LIFE-BOAT?

"HERE AM I; SEND ME."—Isaiah 6:8.

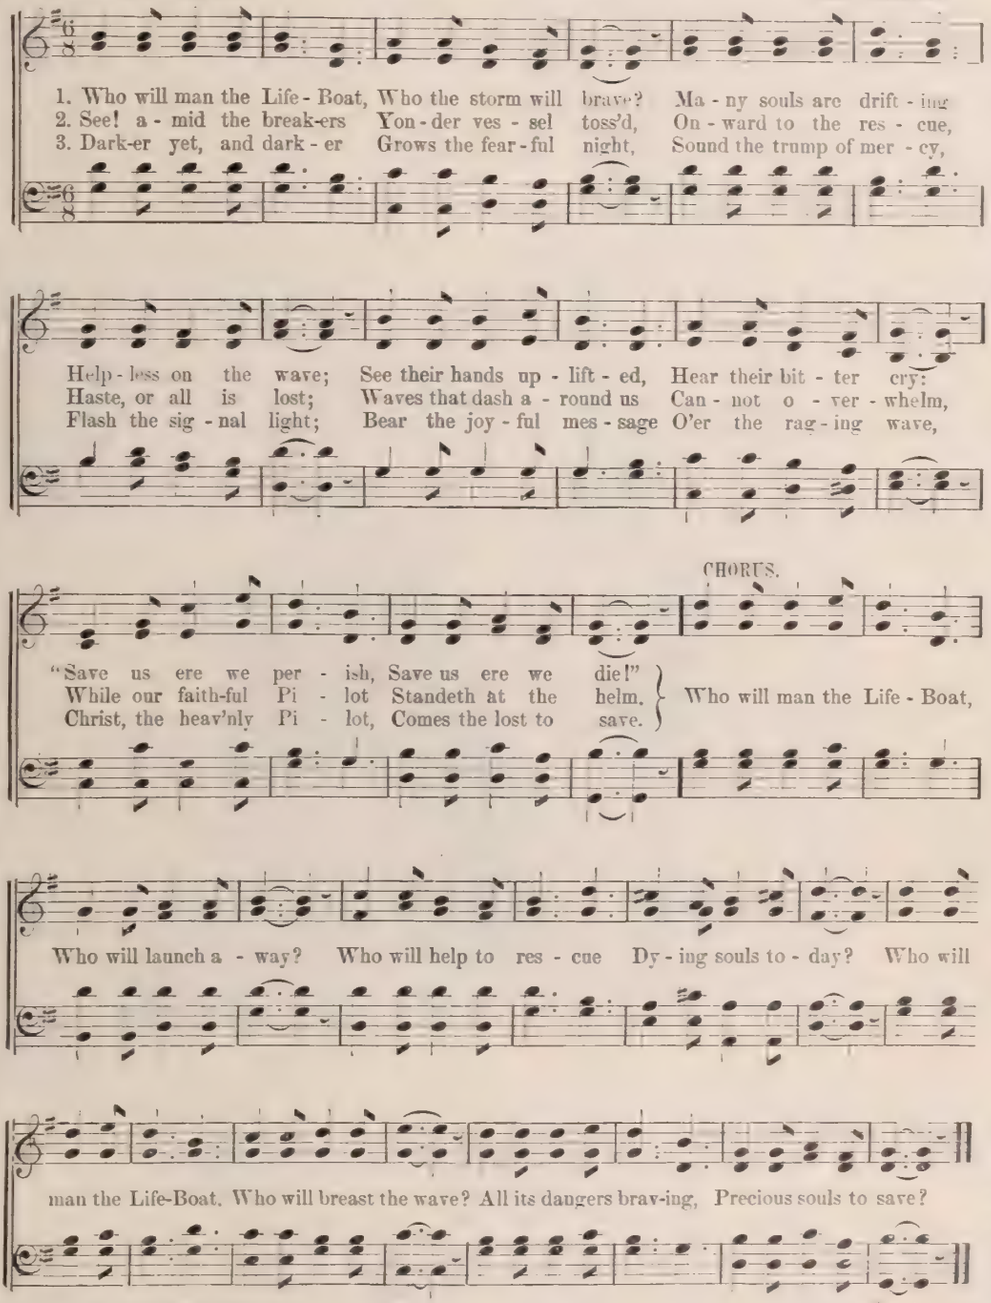
CARRIE E. BRECK, arr. IRA D SANKEY.



1. Who will man the Life-Boat, Who the storm will brave? Ma-ny souls are drift-ing
2. See! a-mid the break-ers Yon-der ves-sel toss'd, On-ward to the res-cue,
3. Dark-er yet, and dark-er Grows the fear-ful night, Sound the trump of mer-cy,
Help-less on the wave; See their hands up-lift-ed, Hear their bit-ter cry:
Haste, or all is lost; Waves that dash a-round us Can-not o-ver-whelm,
Flash the sig-nal light; Bear the joy-ful mes-sage O'er the rag-ing wave, CHORUS.
"Save us ere we per-ish, Save us ere we die!"
While our faith-ful Pi-lot Standeth at the helm.
Christ, the heav'nly Pi-lot, Comes the lost to save.
Who will man the Life-Boat,
Who will launch a-way? Who will help to res-cue Dy-ing souls to-day? Who will man the Life-Boat. Who will breast the wave? All its dangers brav-ing, Precious souls to save?

THE GOODNESS OF GOD.

FATHER thy paternal care
Has my guardian been: my guide.
Every hallowed wish and prayer
Has thy hand of love supplied.
Thine is every thought of bliss—
Left by hours and days gone by;
Every hope thy offspring is,
Beaming from futurity.

Every sun of splendid ray:
Every moon that shines serene;
Every morn that welcomes day:
Every evening's twilight scene;
Every hour which wisdom brings;
Every incense at thy Shrine:—
There, and all life's holiest things,
And its fairest, all are thine.

—BROWNING.

WHEN THOU ART NEAR.

O LOVE Divine, that stooped to share
Our sharpest pang, our bitterest tear,
On thee we cast each earth-born care,
We smile at pain when thou art near!

Though long the weary way we tread,
And sorrow crown each lingering year,
No path we shun, no darkness dread,
Our hearts still whispering, thou art near!

When drooping pleasure turns to grief,
And trembling faith is changed to fear,
The murmuring wind, the quivering leaf,
Shall softly tell us, thou art near!

On thee we fling our burdening woe,
O Love Divine, forever dear,
Content to suffer while we know,
Living and dying, thou art near!

THE GOLDEN AGE.

Changes Which will Take Place in the Physical and Moral Condition of the World During the Millennial Reign.

BY REV. GEORGE C. NEEDHAM.

BETWEEN the earth in her present sinful condition, and her prospective sinless state there will be many striking contrasts, but chiefly this: the entire substitution of righteousness for sin. The earth will continue a sphere surrounded by its blue expanse of sky, but not a stain of pollution will disfigure her fair face. She shall then be like the ransomed glorified Church, "without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing." She will pass from decay and death to healthfulness and life.

No doubt there will be great cosmical changes. A gleam of their character is given us in the achievements of local disturbances. Earthquakes have wrought physical reforms. Rivers have been turned into new channels, hills have sunk, lakes have been dried, mountains have belched forth fire, and oceans have been displaced. Hereafter, there will be an enlargement and intensification of such convulsions. "Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, Yet once, it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens and the earth, and the sea and the dry land."

Provision is made for those who pass over into the restored, and purified earth. As Enoch was caught away from impending judgment by translation, and as Lot was warned by angels to flee from Sodom before the fiery rain had fallen on the guilty city, so will his people be guarded from every hurtful power which may be utilized for the earth's renovation. "They shall be mine, saith the Lord of Hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him." (Malachi 4:2; 3,17.)

What then in brief are the changes which prophecy leads us to expect in this time of blessedness that is surely coming on this afflicted earth?

I. Heaven and earth will come into closer union and communion. The Tabernacle of God will dwell with men. The New Jerusalem will descend out of heaven and be brought into view. Eden in its virgin purity and beauty, its garden of delights with its tree of life, and its innocent occupiers, was only a type, or resemblance of the more glorious and extensive Paradise that shall be. God's purpose in creation that a sinless race shall inherit the planet can never be thwarted.

II. There will be universal peace. Nation will not war with nation; strikes and strifes will cease from the earth. The Prince of Peace, will lift up his ensign—the Dove with the olive branch. No more battles, no more bloodshed.

III. It will be an era of great fertility. The whole land will yield its milk and honey. Food will be in abundance.

IV. Longevity will be restored to man. The life of a man will be as the tree of life, for death, the fruit of man's sin shall pass away with sin itself, and the fruits of righteousness shall abound. Health will be universal; none will be disabled by sickness, and the people will enjoy the work of their hands.

V. Harmony will again be established between the animals. All discord will forever terminate. The lion and the lamb will lie down together, and the lion will eat straw like the ox. They shall not hurt, nor destroy, nor devour one another throughout the holy mountain, for the earth, with its regenerated populations, shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord.

FATHER AGAINST SON

OR,

How the Curse of Horse-Head House was Lifted.

WRITTEN SPECIALLY FOR

"THE CHRISTIAN HERALD"

BY J. C. COWDRICK.

CHAPTER I.

REUBEN HILTON was pacing the floor of his bar-room, with a sullen look on his face. On this night again, as for many nights past, his place was deserted—his place of all others, noted for its warm fires, its lights, and for its goodly cheer. And how lonesome it seemed! The landlord was all alone; not another soul was present in the room. The big clock over the bar seemed to annoy him with its loud ticking, for it was almost a strange sound to his ears. Seldom, at that hour, had the clock been able to make itself heard for jest and laughter.

"I wonder how much longer this craze is going to be kept up?" the landlord muttered to himself. "If I had to be alone like this every night, I believe I would soon go mad. Why don't somebody come in?"

He stepped to a window and looked out. It was snowing. Already the ground was covered, and the brilliant lights from the windows sent their inviting rays far and wide upon the falling flakes.

While he looked the landlord saw someone coming, and he drew quickly back as if unwilling to be seen, but hoping that the person, no matter who it was, would drop in. Even a dog would have been welcome company, just then. Yes, he ascended the steps; he was coming in.

In another moment the door opened and a man shambled into the room, stamping the snow from his boots as he came. It was only Joe Mosely, or "Bummer" Joe, as he was more familiarly known, but even his company was welcome at such a time as this, and a smile greeted his coming. There was a wide difference in the appearance of these two men. Joe Mosely was lean, scantily attired, and had the bleared eyes and bloated face of the confirmed toper. He was shivering with cold.

Reuben Hilton, on the other hand, was sleek and well dressed. He was a large man, weighing over two hundred pounds, and was rather noble-looking than otherwise, when seen at his best. He was now in his shirt sleeves. A heavy gold chain crossed his vest, and a diamond sparkled on his bosom.

"Hello, Joe," he greeted; "just come up from Wheeler's?"

"Yes; thought I'd come up an' tell you the news."

"The news, Joe?"

"Yes."

"Well, what is it?"

"Your boy, Will, went for'd to-night."

Reuben Hilton started as if he had been struck a blow, and his face paled for an instant.

Mosely had advanced to the nearest stove and was rubbing his hands before the grateful fire, and he looked at the landlord to see how he received the information he had brought.

From pale, for the moment, the landlord's face became intensely red.

"Joe, you don't mean it," he said doubtfully.

"Well, that's what they say, anyhow," Mosely declared; "and I guess it's so, for it came purty straight."

"Well, if it is so, I will take that kind of foolishness out of him to-morrow. It is about time that some one took a hand in this matter and exercised a little common sense, and I'll be the one."

"Good for you, Mr. Hilton!"

"I would like to know what Silvervale [illegible] the landlord of the Horse Head House and [illegible] the floor. "It was a respectable place before that fool of a preacher came here, and we enjoyed the reputation of being a pretty level-headed sort of people; but I'll stake my dinner if folks can say the same of us now, Joe!"

"You are right, Mr. Hilton, you are right. Things is all turned upside down here now, and no telling where it will fetch up."

"That is the trouble; no knowing where it is going to end. Business has all gone to the dogs as it is, while everybody is running to that church night after night. A church is all right in its place, Joe, but when it becomes a public nuisance it is high time that something was done.

"Thank God!" cried the widow, "I knew my prayer would be answered"

You are the first man who has darkened my doors since the last bell rang, over two hours ago. By the way, how is it down at Wheeler's? About the same, I suppose."

"Yes, about the same; and Ike is madder 'n a wet hen. Heard him say that he wished the church would take fire and burn to the ground before to-morrow morning, and break the business up."

"Well, I don't blame him. You see, it is a matter of dollars and cents with us, For my part, I don't see what people are thinking about. I call it a craze, that is what I call it. Just to think of it! Here all the stores and shops are closed by seven o'clock, every night, — my place and Wheeler's are about the only ones that keep open; while people are breaking their necks to hear that preacher and get religion. And what will it all amount to? By the middle of next summer they will be back again in the old ruts, and some of them a good deal worse than ever, maybe."

"That is gen'ly the way. You'd be s'prised to see the people around that church to-night, as cold as it is. It is packed full inside, and there's great crowds at the doors and windows, satisfied if they can only get a peep, 'pears to me. For my part, I can't understand it."

"No man of sense can, Joe. And to think that you have made a fool of my boy— But I will take care of his case, rest assured," he added determinedly.

"Ha, ha, ha! I bet you will, Mr. Hilton!"

"Isn't it about time their show was over for to-night, Joe?"

"Yes; I think they was about windin' up when I came along by there, and—"

"Ha! here comes the crowd," the landlord interrupted, and he quickly placed himself behind the bar.

Singing was heard, which came nearer and nearer, and in a few moments the big door of the bar-room was thrown open and a crowd of young men came rollicking in, singing a song to the tune of one of the hymns they had just heard at the church.

The landlord of the Horse Head House greeted their coming heartily.

"Here we are again, Hilton!" one of their number exclaimed. "We have just come from the circus!"

"Well, how was the performance to-night?" the landlord inquired, meeting their frivolity with even greater frivolousness. "Did the clown get off any new business?"

"You would have thought so, if you had been there. It was enough to give a chicken the pip. Come, we want something to put our blood in motion and take the taste out of our mouths; hey, fellows? By the way, Hilton, Billy was gathered into the fold to-night meek as a lamb!"

Reuben Hilton's face flushed again, the same as when he had first heard of it.

"Yes, so Joe here has just been telling me," he acknowledged. "But, I will straighten him out all right in the morning. As I was just saying to Joe when you came in, it is high time that somebody took a hand in this business, and I am going to be that somebody."

"You are just the man, Hilton."

"By the way, what have you done with Fred Wilson?"

"Oh, he was another to fall into the net—"

"Fred?"

"Yes; they drew him the first cast."

"Why, he was the loudest scoffer of you all, last night. I never thought they would get him."

"Well, they did, all the same. Oh, it is getting hot up there, Hilton; it was too hot for Billy and Fred, anyhow."

"And I'll make it too hot for Billy again in the morning, I promise you that. I won't have any son of mine bamboozled in this fashion. Where is he now?"

"He and Fred were ashamed to be seen, after it was over, and we left them there in the hands of the brethren. The young parson must have scooped in a score or more to-night; don't you think so, fellows?"

"I counted twenty-three," another spoke up.

"And which of you is going to be the next to succumb?" asked the landlord.

"Which of us? Ha, ha, ha! Well, now, that is pretty good, Hilton, pretty good. Do any of us look as if we would have softening of the brain before to-morrow night?"

"Neither did Fred, last night, but you see what has happened. As I was saying to Joe, there is no telling where the craze will end, now that it has become epidemic, and the best thing you boys can do is to stay away from there; that is my advice."

"Oh, we couldn't think of doing that, Hilton; we have to go up there to see the fun. There is no fun anywhere else these evenings, you know."

"I know it only too well, worse luck! Well, I am going to see to it that my family don't make fools of themselves, anyhow, and I will give any one of you five dollars, cash, who will put something in Billy's way that will break up the contagion in his case. The boy has Hilton grit in him, and I may have some trouble, if this thing has taken much of a hold; but," bringing his fist down upon the bar, "I will cure him or I will kill him, one or the other!"

For a single moment his hearers were struck with awe at his threat, but it was not lasting, and the bar-room was soon the scene of song and revelry.

CHAPTER II.

Another Picture.

Service was over. Slowly the immense congregation moved towards the doors, for the place had been filled to its utmost capacity and haste was impossible.

The young preacher, Stephen Gillman by name, stood on the edge of the chancel rostrum where he had just pronounced the benediction, his face aglow and his eyes glistening.

Twenty-three converts to-night making more than two hundred in all! No wonder tears of joy welled up unbidden!

As he looked around upon those who had just taken the most vital step of their lives he seemed particularly drawn to two young men, and stepping down he advanced quickly to speak to them.

"God bless you both!" he fervently exclaimed, holding out a hand to each. "I can almost say that this is the happiest night of my life. Next to the time of my own conversion, it certainly is the happiest. I was about your age then," speaking to the younger of the two, "and I made then the vow that with God's help I would never go back; and, thank God, never have!"

"With God's help, I never will!" the youth exclaimed.

The other said nothing, but he returned the pressure of the young preacher's hand.

"God bless you both," the young preacher repeated; "God bless you and keep you! It may not be easy at first; in fact, it may be the contrary; but, trust him, implicitly trust him."

He turned away to speak to others, and the eyes of the two young men met, and each held out his hand.

"I am glad I won't have them all against me, anyhow, Fred," spoke the younger. "I am quite surprised to find you here."

"You are no more surprised than I am myself, Billy," was the response. "I certainly had no intention of taking this step when I came here to-night, but somehow I had to do it. I felt that it was now never. How was it with you?" he asked.

"I came with the intention; I had fully made up my mind to it. But, where is your mother? How pleased she will be!"

"She is at home; she did not come to-night; I think that accounts for it, in my case."

Members of the church pressed around them, congratulating them and giving them hearty words of advice, and their conversation was interrupted.

When the great throng of people had gone from the church, these two started out together. They had never been intimates, though their previous feeling for each other had been friendly; but now they seemed drawn together by new and pleasant ties.

Will Hilton was about twenty years of age, a tall, noble-looking youth, with full, ruddy countenance and bright, clear eyes. Fred Wilson was four years older, had black hair and eyes and a mustache, and his face showed the effects of dissipation. He was not so good-looking as Will Hilton, though he might have been had his life habits been as correct.

The landlord's son had been brought up free from the worst vices. While the landlord was in a measure responsible for Fred's bad habits, he had taken good care to shield his own son from the same snares. Not that he had regard for the boy's spiritual requirements; he had an eye only for the physical needs. He did not drink himself, and he had taken good care that his son did not acquire the habit.

"Which way shall we go?" asked Fred, when they reached the street.

"Why, straight ahead, of course. I have not done anything that I am ashamed of, Fred."

"No, of course not; but I want to avoid calling in with the boys to-night if I can. I have been scoffing so much that they will buy the life out of me if I give them a chance."

"Well, I will go around with you then, for company's sake."

"No, I want you to come around to the house with me; you will want to hear what mother will say."

"Well, I will go, for I do not want to meet father till morning."

In a few minutes more they were at the door of Widow Wilson's cottage, and Fred opened it with his latchkey.

They had barely stepped into the dimly lighted hall when a slight scream was heard, as of joy, and Fred's mother came running from the sitting-room, saying rapidly as she came:

"Fred! It is true, I know it must be true; you are home so early to-night. Only tell me that it is true!"

"Mother, it is true."

"Thank God! thank God!" the widow cried, throwing her arms around her son's neck and pressing him to her breast, not noticing that he had brought company. "I have prayed this night as I never prayed before, and I knew that my prayer would be answered this time!"

She kissed him again and again.

"There, there, mother," said Fred, gently, "do not go on so; you do not see what somebody is with me."

"Oh! No, I did not know any one was with you, Fred. Who is it?"

"Will Hilton."

"And can it be possible that you, too, have——"

"Yes, it is true, Mrs. Wilson," assured Will.

"The Lord be praised! I have prayed for you so many, many times!"

She gave Will almost as warm an embrace as she had given her own son, and conducted them into the sitting-room where a cheery fire was burning and where there was an air of homely comfort.

It was a happy hour—the hour that followed, a time never to be forgotten in the lives of the three. Will Hilton, at any rate, never forgot it, for it gave him strength and courage for the bitter trial through which he was so soon to pass.

Walking homeward he said to himself: "It ought to be easy enough for Fred, with a mother like that to help him. I wish I might have a similar reception. If father will only be reasonable and help me to carry out my plan, everything will be all right, and I can pay him back the money sometime. If he refuse—well, I still have Christ to lean upon, and he is one who will never leave nor forsake!"

Two Corean Fables.

WHOSE CHICKEN?

There was a man who was a famous magistrate in Corea. Once there were two men who quarreled for a chicken. One man said "this is mine," and the other also said thus. At last they came to the magistrate and beseeched him to find out the true proprietor. The magistrate said, "these two men each said he is owner, how can I find out? But this chicken you brought to sell to the market, did you not?" "Yes, sir," said they." Then what did you feed the chicken at your houses when you left your houses in the morning?" asked the magistrate. "At my house I don't have any other grain, but only have little corn, and I fed her that sir," said one of them. "I fed her some rice," said the other. The magistrate told his servant to kill the chicken and cut open the crop, and he found there plenty of corn. The magistrate said to the man who said that he fed rice, "there is no use to remain such a wicked man as you, but I will punish you by some whipping only." And then he gave the chicken to the servant to eat, and paid the innocent man twice as much as the real price.

A GREAT BARGAIN.

There was a poor man who lived in the country, 500 li distant from Seoul. His wife was very anxious for her husband having to suffer to go to Seoul by foot. One day there came a watermelon seller. Now, this village was in a deep valley of the mountain, and she never saw a watermelon before. She asked, "What is it?"

The merchant saw the woman was simple and easily deceived, and replied, "It is an egg of a donkey. If you wrap it with cotton and keep it in a warm place of the room, you would see a small donkey after a few days." "What is the price?" "One thousand cash," said the man. The woman had only three hundred cash. She asked the merchant if he would sell one for three hundred cash. Then she bought it. A few days after, her husband came back. She was very glad to come out to meet him, and said, "I bought a donkey during your absence, and you will never suffer when you go to examination after this." "How could you buy it?" asked her husband. "I had money, but it was too little to buy a big donkey, so I bought a donkey's egg, and it is nearly already to hatch," said she. "How can a donkey have eggs? Let me see what you bought." She showed it to him under a coverlet, but he found a watermelon half rotten. "How much did you pay for it?" he said, "The merchant wanted one thousand cash, but I paid three hundred," said she. The husband was very angry, for they were so poor, to think his wife had bought a watermelon for three hundred cash when it was not thirty cash worth, so he threw it under the fence. There was a rabbit under the fence, and it ran away with great fright. The woman cried and said, "Is not it an egg of a donkey? The young donkey has run away. Why did you not wait a little longer?" The man then also believed it was really an egg of a donkey. He ran after the rabbit, but the rabbit ran into a gentleman's barn and hid under the manger. Then he went to the gentleman and told the story about what had happened, and he wanted to take his young donkey back. "My donkey has born a young one to-day; why are you going to take it by force?" The man answered, "Generally a donkey bears only one young; if there are two, the one is yours, the other is mine." Then they went to the barn and found there were two young donkeys. "There's no doubt about it," said the gentleman to the man," but as it was born from the egg it has no mother donkey to care for it, so you may keep it here until it can eat grain."

Ladies' Aid Societies.

In church work the women are always in front. Three-fourths of the churches of America would be speedily closed without their help. Yet they are often puzzled as to what new steps to take to make their special work bright and interesting. We suggest Lantern services. Don't be startled! Our Stereopticons are perfectly safe, easily operated, and are sold to Ladies' Aid Societies on easy instalments and slides rented.

Send for further particulars, and lantern literature, and get more light on the subject.

Saved from Suicide.

THE story of an escape from a terrible danger is related in a letter from a subscriber, which came to this office some time ago. The writer formerly resided in Brooklyn, N. Y., but his letter is dated from a small town in Hungary, in which he was spending a few days during a tour of that delightful land. After expressing his pleasure at finding THE CHRISTIAN HERALD so far away from home, he says: "It was like meeting a tried and trusted friend, for your invaluable paper was instrumental by God's blessing in encouraging and directing me some years ago in a time of severe mental and spiritual conflict." He then proceeds to describe the circumstances of his peril and his deliverance.

It appears that his mother was in the habit of assisting in the musical part of a service, which was held in the asylum for the insane, at Flatbush, N. Y. During one of his visits to his home, he escorted her to the service and remained to listen. The chaplain gave an address and the proceedings were orderly. But before the address was finished, the silence was broken by a blood-curdling yell from one of the cells in the building. It was repeated and taken up by other maniacs who were confined in adjacent cells. The young man was painfully shocked. He had that peculiar, nervous temperament which is powerfully agitated by contact with deranged persons. Instantly the conviction seized him that he was destined to lose his reason and become like the poor creature whose cry he had heard. The horrible dread overmastered him, but he controlled himself and returned home with his mother.

The next day the impression returned upon him with redoubled force and it increased as the days passed, until he became melancholy. His imagination pictured him being carried to an asylum and restrained, while nameless terrors tormented his diseased brain. "All sleep left me," he says, "and all day and night I was haunted by that awful dread. I could do nothing but weep and walk the floor wringing my hands in absolute anguish. Everything that my dear parents and friends could do to alleviate my distress, they did, but without avail. Society, recreations, medical advice, all kinds of amusement were tried without avail. While the dread spectre was driven away for an hour by some strong enjoyment, it soon returned with increased power, and I became utterly prostrate in mind and body. I was convinced that no human power could deliver me from the fate that awaited me." At this time the thought of suicide entered his mind, as it has come to so many, when no other way of escaping a dreaded calamity appeared open. Horrible as such an act was, it seemed to him less appalling than to become like the poor creature whose shrieks still rang in his ears. It was as when this alternative was apparently forced upon him that the message of "One Mighty to save," which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD carries, came to him. Though human skill was, as he believed, powerless to save him, he knew there were no limits to Christ's power. He fell on his knees and committed his case to the Great Physician. How long he remained kneeling he does not know, but when he rose it was a changed man. A sweet peace filled his soul and the conviction that Almighty power would keep him, banished all dread, and it has never returned.

Do you make doughnuts this way?

Sift 1 quart flour, 1 saltspoonful salt, 1 saltspoonful ground nutmeg or cinnamon, 2 rounding teaspoonfuls baking powder, together. Beat 2 eggs; add 1 cup sugar, 1 cup milk, 2 teaspoonfuls melted Cottolene. Stir these into the flour, roll and cut into shape. Have kettle ¾ full of Cottolene—at just the right heat—and fry the doughnuts in it for 3 minutes.

For frying, Cottolene must be hot, but don't let it get hot enough to smoke or it will burn. To find if it is hot enough, throw into it a single drop of water. When at just the right heat, the water will pop.

Genuine has trade marks—"Cottolene" and steer's head in cotton-plant wreath—on every tin.

Ten Weeks for Ten Cents

For ten cents,—in stamps, if you wish,—The Sunday School Times will be sent on trial, for ten weeks, to any one not at present a subscriber.

Thousands of Sunday-school workers have taken advantage of this offer. If you have never used The Sunday School Times, isn't it worth trying? Over one hundred and fifty thousand Bible teachers and Bible students receive it every week. This cannot be said of any other paper of its class.

Why shouldn't one hundred and fifty thousand more get acquainted with The Sunday School Times—test it fairly—know it as it is—for at least ten weeks? We hope to make them want it permanently by making it invaluable as a lesson help to every live teacher.

Special Notice.—To every subscriber we give two "premiums;" namely, a high standard of excellence, and a remarkably low price. They go with every copy of the paper. A trial subscription includes both "premiums."

Ten cents will bring the paper to you for ten weeks, or we shall be glad to send you a free specimen copy.

THE OPENING WINTER.

A Sermon Preached by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., at Washington, D. C., on the Text: Titus 3: 12. "I have determined there to winter."

PAUL was not independent of the seasons. He sent for his overcoat to Troas on a memorable occasion. And now in the text he is making arrangements for the approaching cold weather, and makes an appointment with Titus to meet him at Necopolis, saying: "I have determined there to winter." Well this is the eighth day of December and the second Sabbath of Winter. We have had a few shrill, sharp blasts already, forerunners of whole regiments of storms and tempests. No one here needs to be told that we are in the opening gates of the Winter. This season is not only a test of one's physical endurance, but in our great cities is a test of moral character. A vast number of people have by one Winter of dissipation been destroyed, and forever. Seated in our homes on some stormy night, the winds howling outside, we imagine the shipping helplessly driven on the coast, but any Winter night, if our ears were good enough, we could hear the crash of a thousand moral shipwrecks. There are many people who came to the cities on the first of September who will be blasted by the first of March. At this season of the year temptations are especially rampant. Now that the long Winter evenings have come, there are many who will employ them in high pursuits, in intelligent socialities, in Christian work, in the strengthening and ennobling of moral character, and this Winter to many of you will be the brightest and the best of all your lives, and in anticipation I congratulate you. But to others it may not have such effect, and I charge you, my beloved, look out where you spend your Winter nights.

In the first place, I have to remark that at this season of the year evil allurements are especially busy. There is not very much temptation for a man to plunge in on a hot night amid blazing gaslights, and to breathe the fetid air of an assemblage, but in the cold nights Satan gathers a great harvest. At such times the casinos are in full blast. At such time, the grogshops in one night make more than in four or five nights in Summer. At such times the playbills of low places of entertainment seem especially attractive, and the acting is especially impressive, and the applause especially bewitching. Many a man who has kept right all the rest of the year will [illegible] and though last autumn he came from the country and there was lustre in the eye and there were roses in the cheek and elasticity in the step, by the time the Spring hour has come you will pass him in the street and say to your friend: "What's the matter with that man? How differently he looks from what he looked last September." Slain of one Winter's dissipation. At this time of the year there are many entertainments. If we rightly employ them, and they are of the right kind, they enlarge our socialities, allow us to make important acquaintance, build us up in our morals, and help us in a thousand ways. I can scarcely think of anything better than good neighborhood. But there are those entertainments from which others will come besoiled in character. There are those who by the spring-time will [illegible] in health, and though at the opening of the season their prospects were bright, at the close of the season they will be in the hands of the doctors, or sleeping in the cemetery. The certificate of death will be made out, and the physician, to save the feelings of the family, will call the disease by a Latin name. But the doctor knows, and everybody else knows, they died of too many levees. Away with all these wine-drinking convivialities. How dare you, the father of a family, tempt the appetites of the young people? Perhaps at the entertainment, to save the feelings of the minister or some other weak temperance man, you leave the decanter in a side room, and only a few people are invited there to partake; but it is easy enough to know when you come out, by the glare of your eye and the stench of your breath, that you have been serving the devil.

Men sometimes excuse themselves and say, after late suppers it is necessary to take some sort of stimulant to aid digestion. My plain opinion is that if you have no more self-control than to stuff yourself until your digestive organs refuse their office, you had better not call yourself a man, but class yourself among the beasts that perish. At this season of the year the Young Men's Christian Associations of the land send out circulars asking the pastors to speak a word on this subject, and so I sound in your ear the words of the Lord God Almighty: "Woe unto him that putteth the bottle to his neighbor's lips." Rejoice that you have come to the glad Winter months that remind you of the times when in your childhood you were shone on by the face of father, mother, brothers, sisters, some of them, alas! no more to meet you with a "Happy New Year," or a "Merry Christmas." But again and again have we seen on New Year's Day the sons of some of the best families drunk, and young men have excused themselves by the fact that the wine-cup has been offered by the ladies; and again and again it has been found out that a lady's hand has kindled the young man's thirst for strong drink, and long after all the attractions of the holiday have passed that same woman crouches in her rags, and her desolation, and her woe under the uplifted hand of the drunken monster to whom she had passed the fascinating cup on New Year's Day. If we want to go to ruin let us go alone and not take others with us. Can we not sacrifice our feelings if need be? When the good ship London went down the captain was told that he might escape in one of the lifeboats. "No," he replied, "I'll go down with the passengers." All the world applauded his heroism. And can we not sacrifice our tastes and our appetites for the rescue of others? Surely it is not a very great sacrifice. Oh, mix not with the innocent beverage of the holiday the poison of adders! Mix not with the white sugar of the cup the snow of this awful leprosy! Mar not the clatter of the cutlery of the festal occasion with the clank of a merchant's chain. Pass down the street and look into the pawnbroker's window. Elegant watch, elegant furs, elegant flute, elegant shoes, elegant scarf, elegant books, elegant mementoes. You sometimes see people with pleased countenance looking into such a window. When I look into a pawnbroker's window, it seems to me as if I had looked into the window of hell! To whom did that watch belong? To a drunkard. To whom did those furs belong? To a drunkard's wife. To whom did those shoes belong? To a drunkard's child. I take the three brazen balls at the door-way of a pawn-broker's shop, and I clank them together, sounding the knell of the drunkard's soul. A pawnbroker's shop is only one of the eddies in the great torrent of municipal drunkenness. "Oh," says someone, "I don't patronize such things. I have destroyed no young man by such influences. I only take ale, and it will take a great amount of ale to intoxicate." Yes; but I tell you there is not a drunkard in America that did not begin with ale. Three X's—I do not know what they mean. Three X's on the brewer's dray, three X's on the door of the gin shop, three X's on the side of the bottle. Three X's. I asked a man. He could not tell. I asked another what is the meaning of the three X's. He could not tell me. Then I made up my mind that the three X's were an allegory, and that they meant thirty heartbreaks, thirty agonies, thirty broken-up households, thirty prospects of a drunkard's grave, thirty ways to perdition. Three X's. If I were going to write a story, the first chapter I would call Three X's and the last chapter I would call the pawnbroker's shop. Oh, beware of your influence.

The Winter season is especially full of temptation, because of the long evenings allowing such full swing for evil indulgences. You can scarcely expect a young man to go into his room and sit there from seven to eleven o'clock in the evening, reading Motley's "Dutch Republic," or John Foster's essays. It would be a very beautiful thing for him to do, but he will not do it. The most of our young men are busy in offices, in factories, in banking-houses, in stores, in shops, and when evening comes they want the fresh air, and they want sight-seeing, and they must have it, they will have it, and they ought to have it. Most of the men here assembled will have three or four evenings of leisure on the Winter nights. After tea, the man puts on his hat and coat, and he goes out. One form of allurement says, "Come in here." Satan says, "It is best for you to go in; you ought not to be so green; by this time you ought to have seen everything," and the temptations shall be mighty in dull times such as we have had, but which, I believe, are gone; for I hear all over the land the prophecy of great prosperity, and the railroad men and the merchants, they all tell me of the days of prosperity they think are coming, and in many departments they have already come, and they are going to come in all departments; but those dull times through which we have passed have destroyed a great many men. The question of a livelihood is with a vast multitude the great question. There are young men who expected before this to set up their household, but they have been disappointed in the gains they have made. They cannot support themselves, how can they support others? and, to the curse of modern society, the theory is abroad that a man must not marry until he has achieved a fortune, when the twain ought to start at the foot of the hill and together climb to the top. That is the old-fashioned way, and that will be the new-fashioned way if society is ever redeemed. But during the hard times, the dull times, so many men were discouraged, so many men had nothing to do—they could get nothing to do—a pirate bore down on the ship when the sails were down and the vessel was making no headway. People say they want more time to think. The trouble is, too many people have had too much time to think, and if our merchants had not had their minds diverted, many of them would long before this have been within the four walls of an insane asylum. These long Winter evenings, be careful where you spend them. This Winter will decide the temporal and eternal destiny of hundreds of men in this audience.

Then, the Winter has especial temptations in the fact that many homes are peculiarly unattractive at this season. In the Summer months the young man can sit out on the steps, or he can have a bouquet in the vase on the mantel, or, the evenings being so short, soon after gaslight he wants to retire anyhow. But there are many parents who do not understand how to make the long Winter evenings attractive to their children. It is amazing to me that so many old people do not understand young people. To hear some of these parents talk you would think they had never themselves been young, and had been born with spectacles on. Oh, it is dolorous for young people to sit in the house from seven to eleven o'clock at night, and to hear parents groan about their ailments and the nothingness of this world. The nothingness of this world! How dare you talk such blasphemy? It took God six days to make this world, and he has allowed it six thousand years to hang upon his holy heart, and this world has shone on you and blessed you and caressed you for these fifty or seventy years and yet you dare talk about the nothingness of this world. Why, it is a magnificent world. I do not believe in the whole universe there is a world equal to it, except it be heaven. You cannot expect your children to stay in the house these long Winter evenings to hear you denounce this star-lighted, sun-warmed, shower baptised, flower strewn, angel-watched God-inhabited planet.

Oh! make your home bright. Bring in the violin or the picture. It does not require a great salary or a big house, or chased silver, or gorgeous upholstery to make a happy home. All that is wanted is a father's heart, a mother's heart, in sympathy with young folks. I have known a man with seven hundred dollars salary and he had no other income, but he had home so happy and bright, that, though the sons have gone out and won large fortunes, and the daughters have gone out into splendid spheres, and become princesses of society, they can never think of that early home without tears of emotion. It was to them the vestibule of heaven, and all their mansions now, and all their palaces now, cannot make them forget that early place. Make your homes happy. You go around your house growling about your rheumatisms and acting the lugubrious, and your sons will go into the world and plunge into dissipation. They will have their own rheumatisms after awhile. Do not forestall their misfortunes. You were young once, and you had your bright and joyous times. Now let the young folks have a good time. I stood in front of a house and I said to the owner of the house: "This is a splendid tree." He said in a whining tone: "Yes, but it will fade." I walked around in his garden, and said, "This is a glorious garden you have." "Yes," he said, "but it will perish." Then he said to my little child, whom I was leading along: "Come and kiss me." The child protested and turned away. He said, "Oh, the perversity of human nature! Who would want to kiss him? I was not surprised to find out that his only son had become a vagabond. You may groan people out of decency, but you can never groan them into it, and I declare in the presence of these men and women of common sense that it is a most important thing for you to make your homes bright if you want your sons and daughters to turn out well.

Alas! that old people so much misunderstand young folks! There was a great Sunday School anniversary, and there were thousands of children present: indeed, the Sunday Schools of the town were in the building, and it was very uproarious and full of disturbance, and the presiding officer on the occasion came forward, and in a very loud tone shouted, "Silence!" and the more noise the presiding officer made, the more noise the children made me one else rose on the platform and me forward, and with more stentorian ice shouted, "Silence!" and the uproar rose to greater height, and it did em as if there would be almost a t and the police have to be called in, hen old Doctor Beaman, his hair white the driven snow, said: "Let me try my nd." So he came forward with a slow ep to the front of the platform, and when e children saw the venerable man and e white hair, they thought they would sh up that instant, and hear what the old an had to say. He said: "Boys, I want make a bargain with you. If you will be ll now, while I speak, when you get to be old as I am I will be as still as a mouse." ere was not another whisper that afternon. He was as much a boy as any of em. Oh, in these approaching holidays, us turn back our natures to what they re years ago, and be boys again and ls again, and make all our homes happy. d will hold you responsible for the inence you now exert, and it will be very ght and very pleasant if some winter ght, when we are sleeping under the inkets of snow, our children shall ride ng in the merry party, and hushing a ment into solemnity, look off and say: here sleep the best father and mother at ever made a happy New Year." Arm urself against these temptations of Deember, January and February. Temptaon will come to you in the form of an gel of light. I know that the poets repent Satan as horned and hoofed. If I re a poet and I were going to picture an, I would represent him as a human ng, with manners polished to the last fection, hair falling in graceful ringlets, a little bloodshot, but floating in bewching languor, hand soft and diamondd foot exquisitely shaped, voice mellow a flute, breath perfumed as though thing had ever touched the lips but m of a thousand flowers, conversation file, carefully toned and Frenchy. But I uld have the heart incased with the les of a monster, and have it stuffed h all pride and beastliness of desire and hocrisy and death, and then I would e it touched with the rod of disenchantnt until the eyes became the cold orbs the adder, and to the lip should come foam of raging intoxication, and the foot the spring of the panther, and the soft hand the change that would ke it the clammy hand of the wasted leton, and then I would suddenly have heart break out in unquenchable nes, and the affected lisp of the tongue ome the hiss of the worm that never ds. But until disenchanted, ringleted d diamonded and flute-voiced, and consation facile, carefully toned and nchy.

Oh, what a beautiful thing it is to see a ng man standing up amid these temptons of city life incorrupt while hunds are falling. I will tell your history. u will move in respectable circles all r days, and some day a friend of your her will meet you and say: "Goodrning; glad to see you. You seem to prospering; you look like your father all the world; I thought you would n out well when I used to hold you on r knee; if you ever want any help or advice, come to me; as long as I remember your father I'll remember you. od-morning." That will be the history hundreds of these young men. How do I know it? I know it by the way you rt. But here's a young man who takes t opposite route; voices of sin charm him ay. He reads bad books, mingles in l society. The glow has gone from his eek and the sparkle from his eye, and t purity from his soul. Down he goes, le by little. The people who saw him en he came to town while yet hovered r his head the blessing of a pure mothr's prayer and there was on his lips the ry of a pure sister's kiss, now as they him pass cry: "What an awful ck!" Cheek bruised in grogshop ht. Eye bleared with dissipation. Lip swollen with indulgences. Be careful what you say to him, for a trifle he would take your life. Lower down, lower down until, outcast of God and man, he lies in the asylum, a blotch of loathsomeness and pain. One moment he calls for God and then he calls for rum. He prays, he curses, he laughs as a fiend laughs, then bites his nails into the quick, then puts his hands through the hair hanging around his head like the mane of a wild beast, then shivers until the cot shakes, with unutterable terror, then with his fists fights back the devils, or clutches for serpents that seem to wind around him their awful folds, then asks for water which is instantly consumed on his cracked lips. Some morning the surgeon going his rounds will find him dead. Do not try to comb out or brush back the matted locks. Straighten out the limbs, wrap him in a sheet, put him in a box, and let two men carry him down to the wagon at the door. With a piece of chalk write on top of the box the name of the destroyer and the destroyed. Who is it? It is you, oh man, if, yielding to the temptations of a dissipated life, you go out and perish. There is a way that seemeth bright and fair and beautiful to a man, but the end thereof is death. Employ these long nights of December, January and February in high pursuits, in intelligent socialities, in innocent amusements, in Christian work. Do not waste this Winter, for soon you will have seen your last snow-shower, and have gone up into the companionship of him whose raiment is white as snow, whiter than any fuller on earth could whiten it. For all Christian hearts the Winter nights of earth will end in the June morning of heaven. The river of life from under the throne never freezes over. The foliage of life's fair tree is never frost-bitten. The festivities, the hilarities, the family greetings of earthly Christmas times will give way to larger reunion and brighter lights and sweeter garlands and mightier joy in the great holiday of heaven.

THE PRODIGAL SON.

THERE'S sorrow in many a heart to-night
And grief in the courts up on high
O'er souls that have wandered so far from light,
Away from the fold that is nigh.

There's many a mother on bended knee,
Whose prayer is ascending above,
"Oh, God! save my darling, so dear to me,
The child of my earliest love."

There's many a father whose hoary head
Bends low for the dear absent one,
Who cries, "Would to God I for thee were dead,
Oh, Absalom! oh, my son!"

Yes, many a heart is aching to-night,
And many the tears that are shed,
O'er dear ones who've vanished beyond our sight,
O'er hopes lying buried and dead.

There's gladness in many a home to-night,
And joy on the streets of pure gold,
O'er souls that are longing again for light
O'er lost ones brought back to the fold.

We some day shall stand by the Jasper Sea,
Perchance with our well-garnered sheaves,
Or bowed down with grief some sad heart may be,
To show but a handful of leaves.

Let's share in the joy of the "harvest home,"
For surely the field is so wide,
Let's tell the sweet story to those who roam,
For whom our dear Saviour died.

Multitudes Moved by a Child.

Cleretta N. Avery, the Wonderful Pickaninny Preacher, and her Enthusiastic Work for Christ—Hundreds Converted through her Sermons in the Southern Cities.

A QUIET, unassuming little girl of ten, hardly more than a mere child, rather small in stature, and with dusky yet delicate features that lighten with bright intelligence as she talks; easy and self-possessed far beyond the average child, fluent in conversation, and pleasant in both tone and gesture. Such is Cleretta Nora Avery, the little colored girl from Charleston, S. C., who for several months past has been preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ to large audiences in the East with telling effect.

Some time ago, remarkable reports were received from the South, about this colored child, who had been divinely called to preach the Gospel. Wherever she went, she stirred the hearts and touched the consciences of men and women by her lucid, earnest and wonderfully spiritual addresses. In North and South Carolina, it is claimed, hundreds were converted through her instrumentality. Yet in no sense is she sensational, but rather quiet and gently persuasive, her sweetly-modulated voice and simple gestures doing more to win the hearts of her hearers than trumpet tones and startling climaxes.

Claretta was born in Washington, D. C., in 1885, of respectable parents. Her mother is a woman of rare acquirements and with an eventful history while her father was an associate and co-laborer with Frederick Douglass and other prominent Abolitionists. Early in life he had joined the Methodist Church, and was ordained a minister of the Gospel. Besides his pastoral work, he found opportunity to edit a paper in the interest of colored schools, and to do much for the general advancement of the colored people in Louisiana and Mississippi. He was a man of strong convictions, a vigorous writer and an eloquent speaker.

When little Cleretta was less than two years old, she began to give evidence of being a wonderful child. It is impossible to say at what age she was converted, but unquestionably, when very young, she realized what it meant to give her heart to Christ. In speaking of her early change of heart, Cleretta always says: "You may doubt it, but since God knows it, and I know it, I am quite satisfied. God's Holy Spirit can acquaint a little child with himself before that child is old enough to know its parents."

When about seven years of age, Cleretta, who had already become a wonderfully eloquent and spiritual child, announced to her parents her divine call to preach the Gospel. They tried to discourage and to divert her from her purpose on the ground that she was too small and uninformed in the Scriptures to attempt so important and responsible a work. But she declared that God had commissioned her to proclaim his truth. and, therefore, she preached her first sermon at Raleigh, N. C., August 17, 1893, at a camp-meeting service. Since then she has preached to large audiences of white and colored people in the towns and cities of North and South Carolina, and has conducted successful revivals at Cherow, Society Hill, Florence, Charleston and Darlington, in which many persons have been brought to repentance and peace. Her sermons are never argumentative nor discussive. A vein of pathos goes through all that she says, and her vividly picturesque and poetic style often carries away the colored portion of her hearers. Her sermons have made an impression upon many hearts.

In her recent sermons preached before both white and colored audiences in New York and New Jersey her manner and the spirituality that pervades all her utterances on the platform have attracted much attention. She never attended school until quite lately and all the education she ever received was that given her by her parents, yet she has a marvelous command of language and her wide and accurate knowledge of the Bible is equally surprising. She talks calmly and deliberately, and discusses the highest religious topics as a mature Christian would discuss them. She makes no notes, but after reading a few verses from she Bible, announces her subject, closes the Book and proceeds in an easy, fluent way that charms her audience. She cannot be diverted from her subject, no matter what occurs or how large the congregation, and she has not even a trace of nervousness.

A few months ago, Cleretta came to Charleston, S. C., and entered the Charleston Industrial Institute and Home for Girls, of which Rev. J. L. Dart is Principal. This institution was founded by a number of leading colored clergymen and laymen of Charleston, for the intellectual, moral and industrial training of some of the thousands of colored boys and girls who are without any school facilities in that city, and are growing up in ignorance, idleness and crime. The demand for Cleretta to preach was very great, and during four weeks she packed several of the largest colored churches three times a day with crowds of white and colored people, and many members were added to the colored churches.

In talking about her extraordinary gift, the child is exceedingly modest. She says no one taught her to preach: the Lord directed her to do so, and she is simply doing his bidding. Her first sermon was delivered in a church at Raleigh when she was eight years old. She doesn't study the Bible for texts, she says, bnt there is always one ready when she wants it. She is never at a loss for words. Many have been converted through her services, but she disdains all merit in such cases, and says that the conversions have come through the power of the Lord alone.

Cleretta has identified herself with the Charleston Industrial Institute, and the proceeds of her lecturing and preaching are to be devoted to the erection of a building for the literary, moral, and industrial training of colored girls. It is estimated that such a building can be erected and furnished for $5000. A site has already been secured on Kracke street, Charleston, adjoining the present Institute buildings. Up to the present time, over one hundred and fifty children have been trained in elementary studies and industrial work at the Institute, and larger facilities are now needed.

Anyone who desires to do so may learn more about Cleretta by writing to President Dart at Charleston. It is evident that the Lord, in his own mysterious way is using this little child for great purposes and should she grow to womanhood, Cleretta Nora Avery may yet render service for Christ compared to which her present experience will be as the bud to the flower, for it is written tnat out of the mouths of babes and sucklings He hath ordained wisdom. All who have heard her receiveed the impression that her mission is sincere and her gifts phenomenal.

The Birth of Christ.

S. S. Lesson for Dec. 22d. Luke 2: 8-20. Golden Text: Luke 2: 10. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

MALACHI, the last prophet of the Old Testament, gives a sad picture of the state of Israel, the people whom God had formed for himself that they might set forth his praise (Isa. 43: 21). Claiming God as their Father, they had ceased to honor him as such, and the very priests who were called to guard the holy name of their God, and maintain his fear, despised his name by offering polluted bread upon his altar, and offering "the blind," the "lame and the sick" for sacrifice, palming off upon God that which they would not have offered to an earthly governor.

It was into such a state of things that the Son of God came into our world! He was not the child of the age, the product of advanced human nature. The time is at hand when the great Antichrist, the man of sin shall "come in his own name," (John 5: 43), and shall be the child of the age, the result of humanity which rejects God. Jesus came, not to exalt human nature, but to take it, in his own person, down to utter shame and condemnation upon the cross; to death and burial, that he might on its ruins make those who would be crucified with him "partakers of the divine nature having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust" (II. Peter 1: 4), i.e., through our human or self-life and its desires.

It was then consistent with the ways of God that, when the stupendous announcement was to be made, that the promised Seed of the woman, the very Son of God incarnate, was born in human flesh, he whose day Abraham saw from afar (John 8: 56), and of whom Moses, the prophets and the psalms spoke (Luke 24: 44), he should announce it to the simple shepherds, who, being unconscious of self, would be able to appreciate the greatness of the communication. Could it be true that the Christ, looked for through nearly four thousand years, was really on earth? Could it be that they, of all other men, and they only, were acquainted with this tremendous fact? But, could it be possible that he, the Lord of heaven, should be born in circumstances so poor and that earth's least instead of earth's greatest should be given to her Lord, and that he actually lay in a manger?

Almost before such thoughts could rise, a divine seal was upon the announcement. A multitude in heaven endorsing the angels' message. This settled the matter, yes; God indeed had spoken, and the Christ indeed was born. But who in Bethlehem knew or cared about the advent of the Messiah? Who even in Jerusalem would hail with believing joy the new-born Saviour? A Zacharias and Elizabeth, a Simeon and Anna, and a little company who "looked for redemption"—this was all! And yet this event touched every soul of man, the salvation of every man who ever will be saved, hung on the good tidings of great joy which, at this moment was shared between heaven's angel host and a few simple, illiterate shepherds! The deepest truths and the most stupendous realities of God are known to the most simple. "Except ye be converted and become as little children ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." (Matt. 18: 3.) Little children are self-consciousness thickens the atmosphere so that the presence of God cannot shine through. The angels went away from them into heaven, but the message of God which they had brought remained with the shepherds. What should they do with it? What should we do with any communication from God which may have reached our hearts? Should we lay it up in our memories as a useful truth to give out at our next Bible class? Alas! many thus treat a message from the Lord; they pass it on without letting it become a power in their own lives. But God's messages cannot be thus lightly treated; the word which does not transform, condemns: The shepherds said one to another, "Let us now go even to Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known to us." They acted on the light from heaven which had come to them. And what about the sheep? They had no time to get anyone to tend them; they ran the risk of losing them because they counted that a message direct from God, of such tremendous import, was worth the loss of the sheep. Are there not many children of God who cannot trust him with their work; their classes and meetings, their visiting or open-air work, and they cannot take time to take in, and make their own, any message from God which has reached them. What would it leave for the shepherds to have waited till morning on account of the sheep and left the great announcement of the Saviour's birth untold till the morning lest the sheep should stray? May not some reader have acted in this way and lost some of God's most precious communications.

The shepherds came with haste, and found Mary and Joseph, and the Babe lying in a manger just as had been told them by the shepherds. With exception of Mary and Joseph, their eyes were the first to look on God incarnate. And their hearts were full, the sheep did not occupy them, a greater thing had come into their lives, and "when they had seen it, they made known abroad the saying which was told them concerning this child." Like the disciples after Pentecost, a constraining power possessed them, they "could not but speak the things which they had seen and heard." (Acts 4: 20.) And God prepared the way for their testimony, it was not in vain: unused as they were to speak of the things of God abroad, their simple relation of what had happened came with convincing power; "All they that heard it wondered at those things which were told them by the shepherds."

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

CHRISTMAS is welcomed by different people with very different emotions. It has a host of delightful associations, but to one born in a Christian land, it should never come without arousing thoughts of its origin. The event all Christendom celebrates on that day, means so much to us, that it would be singularly ungrateful to celebrate the day without thinking of the event that hallows it. The coming of Jesus Christ into the world is to Christians the most momentous event of all time, and in him and around him centre their hopes for all eternity. Even the worldling, to whom Jesus holds no such tender relation, has reason to think of the incarnation with wonder and thankfulness. The world is the better for Jesus having been in it. From his life and teaching have come influences which have made men kinder to each other, more considerate of the weak and afflicted, more gentle and brotherly. Those influences are better understood and more potent in every new generation than the one preceding it and they will continue to grow to the end of time. The advent, therefore, must be to every one an event of epoch-making importance while to the devout believer, who sees in it "God manifest in the flesh," it is of unspeakable moment. The picture Luke draws of the scene is beautiful in its simplicity. A few shepherds are guarding their flocks from danger in the night. Shepherds in those times were interested in the heavenl bodies, and had a primitive acquaintanc with such astronomical science as could b obtained by observation; but on thi night something a great deal more ma vellous burst on their sight. In thes days we have become sceptical about a gels' visits; but to men familiar with Ol Testament literature, the appearance angels was perfectly credible. And surel if any event could bring them to the earth the birth of Christ would do so. Und their direction, the shepherds went to th adjacent village of Bethlehem, the litt hamlet on the crest of the hill, five mile south of Jerusalem, and there found th new-born babe. The village was crowde to overflowing with the numerous pr geny of the House of David. The Roma conquerors had ordered a census and th gathering was the consequence, every or who honored his ancestry going to th family-seat to be counted. So full was th village that the young Galilean moth had been glad to find shelter in the ca near the inn, which was used as a stabl and had laid her precious child in the fee ing-trough, out of which the cattle a their food. There are now no data for a suring ourselves that the day on whi the Christian world celebrates the even was really the day on which it occurre and, at first sight, it seems improbable th in December shepherds would have be in the fields all night watching their flock but in that land and time it was more pr bable than otherwise that they would ha been there. The day has been observ by general consent for more than fifte hundred years and no valid reason has y been advanced for doubting its authenticit

Good tidings of great joy. If the she herds had known and if the world h known how terrible was the need of Saviour, it would not have been necessa for the angels to say that their tidin were joyful. Some time ago an officer one of the outlying provinces of Aust was lying under sentence of death. had been tried summarily by court mart and condemned to be shot. It was a fe ful thing for him, more on account of wife and children, than his own accou for he had faced death many a time on t battlefield. His wife obtained evidence his innocence and went with it to t Emperor in Vienna. But it was a lo way off and the officer feared that s would not be able to get to Vienna a back before the date fixed for his exe tion. Day after day passed and there w no news of her. The day of his dea came and he was being led into the para ground to be shot, when his wife rode on a panting horse, waving aloft his p don. She had ridden day and night t she might get to the prison in time. AMERICAN TRAVELERS IN PERIL.

Rev. Dr. Whittle's Exciting Experience in the Alexandretta Riot—Gazing on Burning Villages and Armenians in Chains—A Visit to the Greatest College in the World.

HAVING just returned from a second and somewhat extended tour through Asia Minor, and other countries bordering on Armenia, I feel that I owe it to the Christian people of America, and our fellow religionists in the far East, to relate some of my recent observations and experiences.

For several months the reading people of the civilized world have been frequently horrified by reading the accounts of the Armenian atrocities. No doubt many readers have often thought that the newspaper accounts of these horrors were overdrawn, but I beg to assure such persons that the half has not been told.

Some fifteen years ago, the Sultan of Turkey, together with his high officials, determined as a stroke of political policy to create a revival of Mohammedanism. Since this decision was arrived at, Turkey has been more of a religious than a political government. Hundreds of mosques throughout the Turkish Empire were immediately turned into schools, so-called colleges and universities. Into these schools multitudes of boys and young men were gathered, and there they were compelled to spend from two to six years in studying the Koran. Philosophy, mathematics, history, natural history, algebra, geometry and astronomy, so assiduously cultivated by the ancient Arabs, are unknown in these schools; indeed the scientific studies of the Western world are by these self-complacent people utterly despised. I have made personal visits to a number of these theological seminaries—a strange name you will say for institutions from which issue such direful influences

The largest one of these schools that I have visited, indeed I believe it is the largest in the world, is in Cairo, Egypt, where there are said to be 10,000 students. Their ages ranged from five years upwards; many of them were blind. The pupils were barefoot and half clothed; each of them had a pigeon-hole less than three feet square assigned to him, in which he kept his book, clothes and food. On entering a large open court with marble pavement, I saw hundreds of students sitting flat on the floor grouped around their several teachers. Many of the teachers and students were stretched out full length on the pavement, with bread and dates in one hand and the Koran in the other. Many, if not all of them, were studying aloud; the buzz and confusion arising from such a concourse the reader can well imagine.

The schools are hotbeds of Mohammedanism; both the instructors and the pupils are wildly fanatical; many of them know the Koran well-nigh by heart, but they are wholly incapable of comprehending the meaning of its simplest sentences; intolerant of those who refuse the Koran, they are ready to use the sword. Only one thing more is left for the graduates of these institutions to do to prepare them for their bloody work, namely, to visit Mecca, which every good Mohammedan is expected to do once in a lifetime.

In approaching the sacred city the devotee strips himself literally stark naked; this done he goes out into a dark valley, and there, for an hour, "throws stones at the devil. He then returns to the sacred city to listen to a sermon against Christians which is well calculated to inflame his passions and arouse his fanaticism to the highest point. The green turban wound around his head is ever afterwards a sign that he has obtained the Prophet's favor by visiting the heavenly city. He now puts on the war paint; unsheathes his sword and flings away the scabbard, perhaps nothing would now more delight him than to shed the innocent blood of "Christian dogs." In many instances pupils from such schools as I have described, have armed themselves with sharp knives and clubs, and roamed the streets in search of Christians, and as often as they were found they were left bruised, mangled and generally in a dying condition. So much for the cause of these unspeakable troubles.

What shall I say as to the extent of these atrocities? The massacres are by no means confined to Armenians. Only a few weeks ago in Macedonia I saw a burning village, whose Christian inhabitants had just been massacred, indeed nothing but the timely arrival of the British fleet at Salonica prevented this slaughter from attaining fearful proportions. Having a personal letter from the Secretary of the American Navy, I obtained an interview with Lord Seymour, Admiral of the English Mediterranean Fleet, who was full of grave apprehensions at these massacres, fearing that they would soon become general throughout the Turkish Empire.

In Northern Syria a number of Christian men came to my tent and detailed to me some of their recent experiences. Only a week before, several members of their families and friends had been butchered. They said that if they had a cow, a horse, or any other personal property that a Mohammedan wanted, he, without ceremony, possessed himself of it. They appealed to me for help to get away from Turkey, and come to America or any other country where they could live in peace and safety. They are willing to sell themselves into perpetual slavery if they could only thereby purchase these inestimable blessings.

At Alexandretta, whither the Marblehead and the California have been sent, several members of my party had a narrow escape. Turkish soldiers from the interior were brought to this port awaiting ships to transport them to some field of action unknown to them. But these soldiers were unprovided for; they were receiving no pay from the Government and had no means of sustenance; they slept on the ground under the broad sky; so pinched were they by hunger that they broke into the stores and shops and helped themselves. This caused a great strife between the citizens on the one hand and the soldiers on the other, and soon a mob many hundreds strong was seen struggling in the streets and devastating property. It was a scene of wild confusion. Before I knew it several members of my party were surrounded by the mob; some of them were arrested, but after great anxiety and considerable delay they were extricated.

A sight enough to move a heart of adamant was to see twenty Armenian prisoners brought into Alexandretta, each with a huge chain about his neck, and all chained together. They were immediately thrust into prison where no one, not even foreign officials, was allowed to see them. No doubt some of these poor, unfortunate prisoners were murdered in their chains.

No one who studies the subject with an unbiased mind, can with the facts before him, come to any other conclusion than that the Armenians are a down-trodden, oppressed and long-suffering people. At first, perhaps, the evils were slight and might have been easily corrected, but the little leaven has leavened the whole lump, and now the trouble is widespread, practically over the whole Turkish Empire. The English fleet is composed of 36 men-of-war, that are constantly moving from one Turkish port to another, to inspire in the natives a feeling not less of dread than of respect for England. Hence this fleet is a mighty argument for peace, and is practically the only guarantee of safety that Christians have in Turkish territory.

What are the emergencies of the case? The Armenian people are in deep need of our sympathy, our moral support and our financial aid. These people are full of self-respect and are heroically struggling for freedom; though outnumbered many times by their foes they are contending for their religious liberty, and are bravely defending the sanctity of their homes, and the honor of their wives and daughters with their lives.

Every civilized nation, especially Christian nations should in this hour of despair, extend to them a protecting hand. Some told me they did not know whence relief would come, but they said they believed that God in his own good time would provide some means of sustenance. Have they exercised this faith in vain? I think not. But the question will have to be answered largely by the Christian people of America.

STUDENTS IN THE GREAT MOHAMMEDAN COLLEGE AT CAIRO, EGYPT

(Here Ten Thousand Pupils are Instructed in the Koran and Taught to Hate the Christians.)

A School in Old Cairo.

It is very Near to the House in Which Tradition says Mary, Joseph, and the Infant Jesus Found Refuge.

EDUCATION in the Orient is a very different matter from what it is in Europe or America. Especially is this the case in Mohammedan countries, where it consists almost exclusively of the study of the Koran, which is held by Moslem teachers to contain all that is necessary for the training of the average student in law, morals, and literature. In the higher Mohammedan schools there are, of course, studies in special branches, with a view to fitting young men for the different professions; but at the great majority of schools the Koran is conned industriously, to the exclusion of everything else.

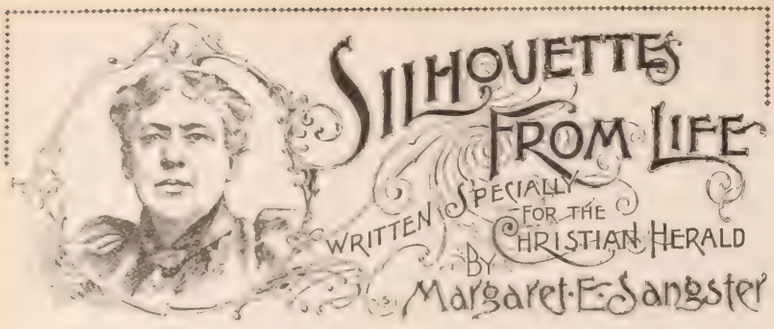
Our colored illustration on the first page of this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD presents a realistic picture of a Mohammedan school in the ancient city of Cairo, Egypt, reproduced from a photograph taken by Rev. W. Jay Peck during a recent visit to that city. To all such schools—and indeed wherever the so-called sacred book of Mohammed is read, visitors are admitted by ticket only, and are provided at the door with slippers which must be worn while they are inside the building. This is by no means an easy thing to do, for the slippers are usually of such generous size that they fall off upon the slightest provocation. In the centre of the schoolroom floor sits the teacher, while round about him are grouped the pupils, some of them bright and quick-witted, and others dull, as the case may be. In his hand is a portion of the Koran, or a commentary in Arabic on that book. Back and forth sway the boys as they recite their task, committing a passage to memory after it has been read and explained by the teacher. It is the Mohammedan Bible and is the only book that ever crosses the threshold of such school-rooms. Occasionally the vigilant teacher, finding some pupil derelict, goads him on to more faithful study with an application that strongly recalls the birch-bark of the village schoolmasters in our land. Boy nature is the same the world over.

In general appearance and in order of studies, the Arabic school remains the same from generation to generation. In retired and dingy, yet picturesque quarters in some house, or perhaps in a quiet nook of some dilapidated mosque, the Moslem teacher instructs his class. With him begins and ends their education, unless they happen to have parents who can send them to one of the few Mohammedan universities. In the present instance, the school in the illustration possesses a peculiar interest from the fact that, according to the tradition, it stands near the house where Joseph and Mary and the infant Jesus found a refuge, while they remained in Egypt after their flight from the cruelty of Herod. In going to that house—or the building which now stands upon its former site—the visitor passes this quaint native school, with its grave-faced earnest, teacher and his circle of small pupils, but little changed probably from the houses and schools of old Cairo, as they were eighteen centuries ago.

Flowers for the Sick.

The box of flowers forwarded by a reader of this journal, were distributed among the sick by Miss Jennie Gilmore, a Christian lady doing missionary work in New York. She writes:

I think about twenty-four families were made happy by those smiles from God. How beautiful the box looked on taking off the lid. My own heart went up in thankfulness to the Creator, and a prayer for the thoughtful donors.



A Christmas Box.

"I WOULDN'T feel so badly," said Mrs. Irwin to her husband, "if I didn't see that the church at home has forgotten all about us. Here are we, toiling and suffering, and acting as their representatives, and what do they care? We may starve, and they will make no sign. Look at Jenny's shoes! See Rob, going to school without an overcoat! And, to go no farther than yourself, you haven't a horse, and you haven't the money to hire one. I'm just down to-night. Think of the Christmas they are going to have in Sixty-fourth street, and then compare ours!"

"Why, Maria!" exclaimed the Reverend Jonas Irwin, pushing back his spectacles. "Why, Maria, my love! What has come over you? When we entered this field we knew we would have to endure hardship. I know it's a long pull, but there are great encouragements. Louis McVey signed the pledge yesterday, and Michael Wanzer has given his heart to Christ. Why shall we not trust in our bountiful Lord a little longer?"

Mrs. Irwin was very busy just then with her baby, whom she had taken from his cradle. The golden head nestled against her bosom. The little dimpled hands stole up and patted her cheek. After a moment she looked up, but Jonas had turned away, and his pen was traveling steadily across the page, as he wrote his next week's sermon. Mr. Irwin never preached from a manuscript, for the people in his frontier congregation preferred being talked to from the pulpit. Nevertheless, he always wrote his sermons, every word of them, and in the pleasure of composition he forgot many of the worries which distressed his wife. She bore the brunt of the home missionary's life of privation and struggle, and its iron entered into her soul, and stamped her face, a face early growing old, as did the women's faces throughout the cold and gloomy region of scant harvests and rigorous winters.

"Jonas is a saint," she said, as she watched lovingly the noble head with its thatch of iron-grey hair bent over the corner of the kitchen-table, which sufficed the minister for a study. Then she went to her only other room to see if there was, by chance, a quilt she could spare to make Jenny a petticoat and Robert a cape.

The church at home had taken great pride in sending out and supporting a missionary, and its intention had never been to be niggardly and mean. But you who dwell on the outskirts do not realize how complex city life may be, nor how often it is want of thought rather than want of heart that makes men and women who have all life's luxuries, heedless of their brethren, who have not so much as life's comforts.

One evening at prayer-meeting in the uptown church in New York, the "home church" of Jonas Irwin and Maria, his wife, the pastor rose in his place and asked [illegible]

"The letter is rather unusual," he said, "and it touched me so much that I had to bring it along and let you share it with me."

"ROCKY HILL, Dec. 1st.

Dear Dr. Irwin:

When you came to see my papa last summer, you told us about the Christmas tree the children have in your church every year. Santa Claus doesn't know the way to Rocky Hill, and Christmas trees couldn't grow in our cold climate. But I want to tell you that our mamma cries herself to sleep every night, because she's had to cut up quilts to dress us with, and our papa hasn't a horse, and has to walk through drifts as high as a house when he visits the sick, and all of the people in our church are as poor as the Lord when he was on the earth. If a blizzard comes, we'll just have to die, for we haven't fuel to keep out the cold. Papa has an old fur tippet, and no thick coat. Neither have I a coat. Wouldn't some boy in our home church send me a reefer? Wishing you a merry Christmas, we are, yours truly,

JANE IRWIN,
ROBERT IRWIN.

"P. S.—Papa and mamma do not know we have written. They would not let the letter go if they did. But Johnny Peggit will put it in the mail for us when he crosses the mountain. So, good-bye, Doctor Washburn."

When the letter was finished, there was a dead silence. Deacon Slocum broke it by saying, "Let us pray."

"I've brought you a Merry Christmas," said Johnny Peggit.

After the prayer, the meeting resolved itself into a committee of ways and means. Doctor Washburn told how he had visited Rocky Hill in the summer, and how bravely and buoyantly the minister and his wife, "our own young people who went out from this church so full of eagerness and hope," were battling with sin and overcoming difficulties in their hard field. They had a meagre stipend to live on, and three children to bring up.

"We will send them a Christmas-box," was the conclusion of the conference, "and it must be packed to-morrow."

So, the next morning the ladies gathered in force in the church parlor. I wish you could have seen the things come in for that box. There was not only a reefer, but a whole fine outfit, a generous outfit for an eleven-year-old boy. A mother brought it tearfully, but with a pale, clear smile, conquering the tears. Her Willie needed those clothes no longer. The Lord had taken him hence. The mother had clung to the boy's garments, and felt them to be sacred, but she could withhold them no longer, now that a little fellow Willie's size was in such want. Men who had an abundant wardrobe contributed garments for the pastor, anxiously asking Doctor Washburn about his size and weight and height. Ladies fitted out the mother and the little Jenny, not forgetting the baby, and finally, so much was brought that there was an overflow box for the needy congregation. One benevolent gentleman sent money, the envelope inscribed, "This is to purchase a horse suitable for a missionary's use. Let it be a good one."

Off went the boxes, and on sped the days till Christmas dawned. All over the world, hearts grew jubilant as the Christmas music woke the echoes, the Christmas bells rang from the steeples, the Christmas gifts went from hand to hand, the Christmas trees were hung with apples and popcorn and candies and presents, and twinkled with tapers for high and low. There was joy on earth. There was joy in heaven. And again, in the starlit sky, I believe the angels sang exultingly: "Glory to God in the Highest, good-will on earth, and peace to men."

God rest ye, merry gentlemen,
Let nothing you dismay, sang the Rev. Jonas Irwin on Christmas morning, stopping in the middle of the old carol, to ask a blessing over the oatmeal porridge on the breakfast table. His face was so benignant it made you happy to look at him, but his wife's eyes were red, and there were dark shadows under them. And the children felt somehow a blank, as if Christmas ought to be, yet was not, different from other days.

When "Hurrah boys," and "here's fun," resounded down the road, and there at the door was Johnny Peggit, mail-carrier, expressman and general factotum for the region round about Rocky Hill.

"Its well the snow kept off, or I'd never got these 'stravagin' big boxes over the hills," said Johnny, stamping vigorously to restore the circulation to his cold feet. "I've brought you people a merry Christmas, sure enough, I certainly have!" Johnny Peggit added, blowing on the ends of his frozen fingers.

Then they opened the boxes, and read the letters, and found all the presents: a doll for Jenny, a new knife and sled for Robert, a box of blocks for the baby, a lot of books for the minister, a set of silver spoons for his wife, these all extra, over and above the needed gifts of clothing and money, and a store of warm garments from everybody to everybody; the home church remembering the Rocky Hill branch in true Christmas loving-heartedness.

And to-day as Mr. Irwin mounted on a sure-footed pony goes to and fro among his parishioners, he is fain to say, "Thou hast put a new song into my mouth, even praise to our God."

And round the world a tidal wave
The Christmas cheer extends,
For heaven its best and largest gave
When foes were won for friends,
And on a lowly mother's breast
He lay, the undefiled,
And slept as birdling in its nest,
The blessed Holy Child.

Oh! Lord of all, below, above,
Who came for you and me,
And in surpassing, wondrous love,
There lay on Mary's knee,
Oh! Lord, whose Star in Bethlehem
First dawned, to stream afar,
Take us, to be thy diadem,
Thou bright and Morning Star!

Requests for Prayers.

At the Converts' Sunday Afternoon Prayer Meeting at the Bowery Mission, prayer was offered on Nov. 24, in accordance with the requests of the following persons, who also ask the prayers of our readers:

For the Conversion of Relatives and Friends. B. N Talcott, W. Va., for the conversion of a son who is utterly indifferent to his own salvation.——A Sister, Brooklyn, N. Y., for her brother's salvation.——"Broken Hearted Wife and Mother," Mich. That her husband, who has fallen under the power of drink, may be reclaimed and become a Christian; also for her sons and daughters that they may give their hearts to God.——Subscriber, Rochester, N.H., for a young man of brilliant talents who is a friend of the saloon and an opponent of God's Word, that he might be converted.—— "Subscriber," that a son who is exposed to strong temptation may be kept from sin by God's grace, and that two young daughters may be brought to Jesus in their youth.——Subscriber, Poland, Me., for the conversion of her ungodly husband who is very bitter against religion and very abusive; also for the conversion of her only brother.——"Anxious Mother," N. D., for the salvation of her two sons, one of whom is becoming a confirmed drunkard and gambler and the other is without God's protecting grace; also that their three sisters might give their hearts to God.——"Believer," Hudson, Mass., for the conversion of a dear brother who is a slave to liquor and tobacco and that he may be restored to his home.——O. M.W., Erie, Pa., that her son, now far away, might become a child of God; also that her grandson might be led to Christ.

For the Restoration of Health: S. H. Elizabeth, N. J., that two afflicted daughters may be recoved of their malady by him who when on earth heard and granted a mother's prayers for her children——Widowed Mother, Gaithersburg, Md., that the nervous affection that is distressing her and keeping her from the house of God may be removed, and that she may be enabled to put her trust in God and rejoice.——"Believer," Hudson, Mass. That her hearing may be restored.——"Subscriber," Poland, Me., for the recovery of a wife who has been a great sufferer for many years; also for the recovery of a man who has been almost bed-ridden for twenty-two years.——B. N. Talcott, W. Va. that a beloved daughter who has been afflicted for years may be healed.

For Special Blessings: "Tempted One," New York City. That God would give her strength to starve rather than sin.——"Business Woman," Philadelphia, Pa., that her employer who is a Christian and prominent in Christian work, might have his eyes open to see that his employees, who cannot obtain salaries sufficient to provide them with even the commonest food and clothing, must commit sin in order that they may dress as they are required to dress to keep their situations.——"Subscriber," N. B., that God would open the way to the fulfilment of a pledge.——"Believer," that God would enable her to keep her home and to bring up her two children to love and serve him.——L. P. R., Quincy, Mich. Who is becoming blind, that God would give his grace to be patient under the afflictions and vouchsafe such spiritual light as will be a consolation when the scenes of earth and the words in books are shut out from sight.

The Czar's Portrait.

Some time ago, one of the Czars of Russia offered a prize of $30,000 for the best portrait of himself. All the painters in the empire were invited to compete, and nearly a thousand complied with the invitation. A few days before the time appointed for awarding the prize, the committee were passing through the gallery where the pictures were being hung, and, noticing a picture leaning against a post, one of the committee said to the others, "There is no use in hanging that daub." "I beg your pardon," said the artist, who overheard the remark; "I painted that picture, and I claim the privilege of hanging it in the proper light, at the proper distance, and then you may pass judgment upon it." The committee, of course, felt the demand was reasonable, and when the award was given, that picture had the prize. Much depended, indeed, nearly all depended, upon the light and the hanging; and if we let our Christianity hang in the light of worldliness and sin, if we are seen by the world in the environments that are bad, the light which shines upon us will not reveal the features of Christ's character.

VAN MISSIONARIES IN PERIL.

Our Commissioner Arrives Only to Find the City in a State of Seige—A Massacre Imminent —Kurds and Turks Devastating the Surrounding Country.

BEFORE this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD reaches the hands of its readers, the city of Van in Armenia, together with all its mission buildings, its native Christian population and the Armenian attaches of the various missions, may have shared the fate of Harpoot, which only a few weeks ago was the scene of a terrible massacre. Our Commissioner, Mr. W. W. Howard, the news of whose arrival on the Turko-Persian frontier opposite Van, was received last week by cable, describes the condition of affairs in Van and the surrounding country as sufficiently startling to warrant the gravest apprehensions. Telegraphing from Djoulfa near the frontier, he states that Van is practically in a state of siege: that the trees along the streets have been levelled to permit the planting of cannon in positions that command the Armenian quarter of the town. Large bodies of Kurds, who have devastated the neighboring country between Van and the frontier, destroying over forty villages and massacring their inhabitants, are now concentrating in Van. They are supported by Turkish regulars, and all the preparations have been made for a wholesale slaughter of native Christians.

This ominous intelligence adds a new horror to the situation in that unfortunate land, whose people are apparently doomed to destruction. All the despatches lately received from the East lead to the inevitable conclusion that the massacres are the result of official orders from Constantinople. According to the most reliable authorities the number of martyrs who have perished in Armenia by the hands of Moslem murderers during the last two months is as follows:

District.	Killed in City.	Killed Villages.	Total Killed.
Trebizond	800	300	1,100
Baiburt	500	300	800
Gumush Hane	250	300	550
Erzingan	1,000	900	1,900
Bitus	800	400	1,200
Khnous	---	300	300
Boulinak	---	400	400
Harput	---	1,000	1,000
Sivas	---	300	300
Palu	450	200	650
Diarbekr	2,500	500	3,000
Aladjan	300	100	400
Erzerum	700	500	1,200
Curin	300	100	400

These estimates are rather under than over the actual figures, which may even reach 20,000! One estimate says that 150,000 have perished in eighteen months. The story of one slaughter is the story of all: the Kurds, directed from higher sources, swooping down on defenceless villages, rounding up the cattle, slaying the strong men, outraging and abducting the women and killing even the children, concluding their satanic work by burning everything that would consume. Where one month ago there were hundreds of homeless and orphaned ones there are now thousands. No words, no pen can describe the awful condition of Armenia to-day. In many places, the Kurdish troops came equipped with empty sacks strapped to their saddles for the purpose of carrying off the plunder. At Baiburt, where over 800 Armenians were massacred, the Kurdish chiefs openly declared that they were ordered to slay the Christians and take the plunder for their pay. This declaration has been freely made in many other places where massacres have occurred.

Mr. Howard, from the moment he entered that part of Persia contiguous to the frontier, encountered evidence of Kurdish ferocity and hate of the Christians. In a second despatch to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, he telegraphs as follows:

DJOULFA, Nov. 29. Twice driven back from Turkey. Kurds are devastating the country and it is impossible to obtain guards at any price. I have offered $500 for escort to Van. The Hamidieh cavalry, assisted by regular Turkish troops disguised as Kurds, have destroyed forty-six Armenian villages between the Persian border and Van. Many persons have been massacred, a number of women were ravished and girls abducted. It is impossible to estimate the number of killed at present. Armenian patriots gave battle to a large force of Hamidieh Kurdish cavalry for two days near Serai. Many were killed on both sides, and the Hamidieh withdrew. They destroyed Serai and attacked the Persian village of Kotour, but they were repulsed by the fort and the Kotour garrison, after a two days' fight. Turkish regulars waited near, ready to join in the plundering of the village if the Kurds succeeded in capturing it. The Hamidieh attacked and destroyed another village. Refugees in the various districts report that the entire province of Van is being devastated by the Hamidieh.

A letter from Mr. Howard, dated Tabriz, Oct. 27, states that his journey through Russia and Persia was safely and quickly accomplished. At the time of writing, he expected to be in Van within a few days, but, as his telegrams disclose, it was only after nearing the border and making repeated attempts at the risk of life, that he was compelled to temporarily withdraw. News from the missionaries in the invested city will be awaited with much anxiety.

Missionary appeals come from many quarters in the afflicted country where communication has not been suspended. Rev. H. O. Dwight cables to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD from Constantinople, Dec. 1, urging that telegraphic remittances be made from the Relief Fund, and adding that he has a telegram from the American missionaries at Harpoot, stating that starvation is imminent. Such aid must come quickly if lives are to be saved. The survivors of the Erzingan massacre have appealed to the Patriarch at Constantinople to lay their sore need before the world, and to "send aid quickly, quickly, quickly." But these are only a few; similar appeals, heart-moving in their terrible earnestness, are coming in from a score of districts where continued massacres have made the trembling survivors almost wish for death, that they might be spared the pain of witnessing further horrors.

Meanwhile, the European powers remain passive spectators, not unsympathetic, yet absolutely inactive. Their united fleets are outside the Dardanelles, but not a gun has been fired and not a sword unsheathed to save the life of a single Christian native. It is a spectacle that disgraces civilization. Each jealous of the other, the powers individually are prevented by selfish interests from taking the initiative to stop the massacres. A joint demand was made upon the Sultan to permit each power to have a second war vessel in the Bosphorus. At first the Sultan consented, but afterward revoked the permission, and up to the present, he has continued to defy the authority of Europe and to mock at the threats of interference, knowing that the lack of harmony among the powers would prevent united action. His promise to institute reforms in Armenia has proved worthless, and it is now believed that all the massacres have been inspired if not literally directed from Constantinople. Up to the present time, no Americans are known to have become victims of the Kurdish or Turkish attacks, although much American property has been destroyed. The Sultan has been warned that if there should be an outbreak at Constantinople, the foreign fleets would enter the Dardanelles. His retort is said to have been a threat that if the fleets should enter or attempt a demonstration, he would not be answerable for the consequences—implying plainly that a general massacre of foreigners would follow in all the Turkish cities. So strained is the situation that a war may be suddenly precipitated, involving all the European nations. Even without such a result, the disintegration of Turkey and the general break-up of the Ottoman power seems assured.

There is still an embargo on all postal communication with Armenia, and for weeks past, few letters have been received. One long-delayed letter which has evidently undergone much official scrutiny and has been forwarded only many weeks after mailing, has come from Van, to Armenians in New York. It is specially interesting as containing Dr. Grace Kimball's report of the Industrial Relief work up to October 15. She writes:

The plan of this work is to aid without pauperizing, and to utilize a part of the great number of workers who are idle and starving because there is no work to be had. A large proportion of the people of both city and villages are conversant with the various processes in the manufacture of course cotton and woolen fabrics. This suggested a simple solution of the work problem. Small sums of money had, as early as June, come to us for our distressed people. And on the strength of this money and the increasingly urgent demands for help, a very simple beginning was made. A bag of wool was bought, weighed out into pound portions, and whenever a woman came begging for help or work, her case was investigated, her name registered, and she was given wool to card and spin. On return of the thread it was weighed and examined as to quality; the woman was paid at a rate that, it was estimated, would supply her with bread, and she was given another lot of wool. The giving of two or three lots of wool in this way was enough to bring down on us a crowd, and speedily we found a large business flooding in upon us—one demanding good organization and a corps of distributors. Cotton was added to our supplies, and all the processes and tricks of the two trades were quickly investigated, and every attempt was made to put the enterprise on a sound business basis. We were able to select at once those whom our hearts had ached to help to gain a living, and a good corps of helpers were soon organized. Men to keep the door—and it often took three men to do this against the clamoring crowd—men to receive and weigh the wool, cotton and thread: men for the various demands of the Central Bureau.

For the first two months the work was accommodated in our house, in the rooms used as a dispensary, and we were in a state of seige from morning to night. The long lower hall was devoted to a row of cotton-carders, the twang of whose primitive cards and the dust of whose work, filled the house from early morning till dark, while a crowd of wretched men and women was never absent. The accumulation of thread brought the necessity for weavers, and all the processes of weaving had to be studied. The demand was met at once by weavers who were out of work and in dire poverty. The thread was given them by weight, and the woven goods received by weight; and they in turn were paid with due regard to the needs of their families. Those [illegible] who were too weak and sick to do the heavier work, yarn was given to be spun [illegible].

Shortly, we found ourselves in possession of a good stock of cotton cloth, woolen goods for the loose trousers worn here, and huge piles of coarse socks. And the question what to do with them came to the front. The suggestion was made that this work might help and be helped by the Sassoun Relief work, by our supplying materials for distribution there. The proposition was submitted to Messrs. Raynolds and Cole and gladly accepted by them, and this arrangement has been the means whereby our Bureau could double its efficiency, thanks to having an assured market for all its produce, without affecting the same industries here, which on the contrary it should help. Our goods are done up in bales, loaded on donkeys or ox-carts, and carried down to the lake harbor. They are received by the miserable little sail-boats that ply the lake, and taken—with prayers for insurance—to the opposite side of Van Lake, a distance of some sixty miles. Thence they are transported by horses or carts to Moosh, the headquarters of the Sassoun Commission. The journey takes from ten days to two or three weeks. In this way we have already sent some 2000 pairs of socks, and 1400 webs of cloth. The total number of workers (up to Oct. 15, was as follows:

Spinners of cotton and wool	373
Weavers of cotton goods	49
" " woolen goods	22
" " carpets	5
Carders	9
Spindle Rillers	9
Sizers	4
Weighers, Distributers, etc.	5
Total	476

The average of wages per capita for the week was seven piastres, or about thirty cents. The intense poverty of the people is shown by the fact that these wages, small as they are, exceed from one-third to one-half the regular rates for the same work. On the other hand the demands grow more and more urgent—desperate, I might well say. So importunate are the crowds that I often have to call a man to pass me out of the office after my work is done. They beg and weep and catch at my clothes and will not let me go. And it is maddening to see such misery, and yet be obliged to turn a deaf ear to so much of it. We help, through our 476 workers, some 2000 souls, and this is not in itself, a small thing. But when it is compared with the vast number of helpless poor about us, it accentuates our appeal to our more fortunate fellow Christians for larger help.

The gratitude of these people is touching in the extreme. Would that I could send to each one who has given to this work the blessings and the prayers and the gratitude that are bestowed on them daily. And yet the cry goes up for more help. Winter cold and rains are upon us. Thousands have but the thinnest and most ragged clothing, no shoes or stockings, many no beds, and most no fuel or other winter provisions. Thousands never taste anything but course, dry bread for weeks and months at a time—and little enough of that—while especially in the villages, hundreds have not even that, and are on the verge of starvation. I doubt not that many will have actually starved before these words are read in America.

It is a national tragedy we are witnessing, and we know not what the end will be. It is also and especially an historical struggle between Islam and Christianity. Christianity is for the present sadly worsted, and it remains for Christian Europe, England and America to decide which shall ultimately be victorious. All that Armenian Christians can do is to die martyrs to the Faith, and that they have done, are doing, and will continue to do daily, until help come—help which reaches not merely Embassies and the Capital, but which penetrates to the remote villages and mountain fastnesses where the worshippers of the Cross are to-day at the pitiless mercy of the fanatical Kurd and Turk.

In closing this incomplete report of our mutual work, let me again assure all our helpers and co-operators, of the deep appreciation of their aid and sympathy that is felt, not only by those who receive their gifts, but by the entire Armenian people. And let me also remind whomsoever may feel impelled to send us aid that he is not only aiding a starving people, but is also helping to maintain Christianity against its most virulent foes.

Acknowledgment of contributions to the Relief Fund, delayed on account of the pressure on our columns during the last two weeks, will be found on the next page. All contributions should be sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N. Y.

A YEAR AMID POLAR ICE.

The Perilous Expedition of the Jackson-Harmsworth Party in the Little Steam Whaler, "Windward" Thrilling Experience in the Pack Ice—A Safe Return.

THE "WINDWARD'S" CHRISTMAS DINNER.

IF EVER a band of men, snatched from the jaws of death and safely restored to home and friends, felt like praising the Lord of the Christmastide, it was the officers and crew of the steam whaler Windward, which, a few days ago, returned to London from a year's exploration in the Arctic. Sixteen months have passed since the Windward, with a crew of nearly forty men, set out for the ice-bound coast of Franz Josef Land, between which and the Arctic Ocean lies a great ice-barrier. It was the purpose of the leader of the expedition, if the weather proved propitious, to attempt a journey through to the ocean beyond. How the Windward and her crew fared is interestingly told in the story of the expedition written by Mr. Frederick G. Jackson to Mr. Alfred Harmsworth, the patron of the expedition. The object of the voyage was to leave Mr. Jackson and a small party of associates at a point as far north as possible, from which they could penetrate still farther and make explorations. The little ship proved a stanch craft, and this saved her many a time in the stiff stress of Arctic weather, and in the grip of the heavy ice. For sixty-five days she did battle with the floes, and, her coal having run short, she had to sacrifice her topmasts, her 'tween decks, her bridge, every available bulk-head and the 'midship portion of her bulwarks to feed her own engines! But for this self-immolation she would never have got out of the ice, neither ship nor crew being prepared for a second winter in the North. It was hoped, when she sailed from the Thames last year, that she would return before the winter set in after having landed the exploring party at Franz Josef Land. But the Windward was fast frozen in off Cape Flora, and all idea of returning that season had to be abandoned.

During the time the vessel lay there, a prisoner of the snow, three members of the crew died of scurvy. A house of pine logs, caulked with moss and lined with felt, was built, in which the entire party were comfortably quartered and a sufficiency of stores were transferred from the ship. There was an abundance of clothing and sleeping bags. Throughout the winter, preparations were going on for the march north to be begun in the spring. Mr. Jackson kept his men in constant active exercise, and every day something was done in the way of collecting specimens or bagging bear.

Mr. Jackson was not satisfied with the deer-skin sleeping-bags, and describes in one of his letters the following test applied to his clothes: "On several occasions during the winter I slept out on the top of the flat roof of the house, having a clear sky above me and the thermometer down to forty degrees Fahr. At other times a heavy gale was blowing with the temperature not above thirty-five degrees Fahr., which is cool; but yet I found that sovik, militza, pimmies and tobocks (foot-wear), after making one or two alterations, were better than any of the sleeping-bags."

On April 4 the ship was placed in great peril by a sudden break-up of the ice. For more than a week furious gales from the east had prevailed, but no one thought that the heavy ice would be greatly affected so early in the season. Suddenly, however, and without warning, great crevasses were rent in the ice near the ship, with cracks and reports like thunder. A whale-boat, which was lying alongside the ship on the port side, was swept away in a moment, and a sheet of open water lay where only a few seconds previously there had been solid ice, ten to fifteen feet thick. So swift is the movement and so sudden the change of the polar pack! Yet both movement and change are often intensely local, and this characteristic saved the Windward from being swept out of the safety of her winter quarters into the peril of the swirling pack. The wind was blowing with the force of a gale, and snow was driving thick. Calling all hands together, both land-party and crew, Mr. Jackson got long lines secured to the ship and paid out to a huge ground-berg which lay near by. There was a large floe of grounded ice to the starboard, and to this also he made the ship fast by means of lines. No fires were in the furnaces, and, there was no possibility of getting up steam. The sails might have been set, but they were as stiff and hard as steel sheeting. All efforts were concentrated on making her fast to the portions of ice less likely to break up. A short while afterwards a huge ice-flow many miles in length, and having a sharp, triangular bow, drifted rapidly down upon the ship. Had it touched her, she must have been swept away from her quarters, and probably with a big hole in her side. But, by a fortunate chance, the pointed floe just passed along her side and struck the land floe (between the ship and the coast) with a terrific crash, throwing up hummocks of ice of great size. Then turning, as ice so often does, upon its own axis, it swung round gently and enclosed the ship completely. The Windward was safe again in winter quarters, and it was not until July that any further change took place in the condition of the ice in which she lay.

It was July 3d when the Windward again set her bow to the south, leaving Mr. Jackson and party comfortably established on Franz Josef Land, at 81 deg. 20 minutes latitude and about 500 miles distant from the North Pole. But another great peril awaited the vessel before she could make her way to the open sea. It took two months to get through the intervening ice barrier, and this was only accomplished by burning part of the ship as fuel. At last, on Oct. 22, she reached her home port.

It is proposed to communicate with Mr. Jackson again by another expedition next September or October. Meanwhile, it is not anticipated that the explorer and his company will have any serious discomforts to contend with in their scientific work. Mr. Jackson took out with him on the Windward a small steam sloop, a large quantity of clothing and supplies, and a full equipment of scientific apparatus. The headquarters on Franz Josef Land already mentioned, are well calculated to keep out the winter cold as well as to defend the occupants against assaults by bears or other animals. One of the illustrations on this page shows a fine specimen of a Polar bear which was caught just in time, and taken aboard the Windward for the explorer's dinner last Christmas.

Mr. Harmsworth, the promoter of the expedition, is a young Englishman who has made a large fortune as a publisher. Previous to his present trip Mr. Jackson had made a four thousand mile sledging expedition in Arctic Russia. Mr. Harmsworth heard of this and, having a desire to undertake the sending out of a Polar vessel, chose Mr. Jackson as the head of the scientific corps which was to operate in Franz Josef Land for the season after the vessel's departure. It is proposed to push the line of exploration and investigation as far north as can be done before next fall, and if possible, to eclipse the record of the Americans, who have thus far reached a point nearer the Pole than other explorers.

The only expedition which had previously gone in from the south coast was the Austro-Hungarian expedition led by Payer and Weyprecht, over twenty years ago. It is now proved by Mr. Jackson's discoveries that Payer's map is so inaccurate that the English expedition did all this second journey on sea ice, but over a tract marked as land in Payer's map. Mr. Jackson has carefully marched several times over a region never before traversed, and he has been able to rectify much erroneous information previously obtained concerning parts of the Arctic world.

THE "WINDWARD" BREAKING THROUGH THE ICE OFF FRANZ JOSEF LAND AND STARTING FOR HOME

A Medium Exposed.

THERE are still many people who need the advice that Isaiah gave to the people of his day: "When they shall say unto you, Seek unto them that have familiar spirits and unto wizards that peep and that mutter: should not a people seek unto their God?" They should do so, but they do not, and some of them have been learning their folly.

For some years past, believers in Spiritualism have been interested in the extraordinary manifestations, worked through the medium of a Neapolitan woman, named Eusapia Paladino. The criticism of unbelievers, met with the answer "You should see Eusapia; you have not seen this science in perfection till you have seen her."

At last the Society for Psychical Research induced her to visit London, paying her expenses and fees. The result is described in the English journals of Nov. 1. Her admirers included such distinguished men as Lombroso, Schiapparelli, Prof. Lodge, Prof. Sidgwick, Dr. Hodgson, Mr. F. W. Myers and Mr. Andrew Lang, who all considered her to be a marvelous exponent of occultism. The manifestation was the old spiritualistic seance all over again, the individuals present, including the medium, being seated in a ring, holding each other's hands in a dark room. The instruments of music and the persons of the spectators were then touched by invisible hands supposed to be those of spirits. The hands of the medium were, of course, supposed to be held by the wise men. Mr. J. N. Maskelyne, the prestidigitateur, who was among the spectators, sat next to the woman at the seance, and found that she only allowed a finger to rest upon his hand. He felt sceptical about the movements being the work of spirits. His own professional feats suggested the conviction that the woman might possibly have an imitation hand that she could hold by her teeth and substitute for her own, which would be resting on her neighbor's, and so have the use of an arm, but he found her device even simpler: she made one of her hands do duty for two, that is, she crossed her wrists and allowed her right-hand neighbor to hold the thumb of her left hand, while to her left-hand neighbor she gave the fingers of the same hand, thus keeping a free right arm to aid the "spirits" in their work. Mr. Maskelyne asked Eusapia if she would consent to have her hands touched with phosphorus so that they should be luminous during the seances, but the woman refused. Neither would she have her hands held in position by a piece of twine. Nor would she allow her neighbors in the mysterious ring to hold a thumb each. As she would submit to no tests, the Society for Psychical Research declared her to be a fraud and gave her up. She will now be classed among clever sleight-of-hand performers instead of as a priestess of spiritualism.

Our Armenian Commissioner.

WELCOME intelligence of the safety of Mr. W.W. Howard, our Commissioner to Armenia, has been received by the cable. After a perilous journey, he has reached the Turko-Persian border, but only to find the city of Van, his objective point, in the throes of a siege and all avenues of approach temporarily occupied by bodies of Kurdish troops, bent on massacre and pillage. For the time being, all communication with the city seems to be suspended, and nothing short of divine interposition can avert the awful massacre that is imminent. God grant that the missionaries may be protected in this ordeal! The relief work, which has thus far proceeded uninterruptedly through Dr. Grace Kimball and her associates, will be made ten-fold more necessary and urgent by these new horrors, since the sufferers are multiplied. A third remittance, to the amount of five thousand dollars, has been forwarded from the Relief Fund during the week, to the Missionary Committee at Constantinople for use in the most necessitous sections of Armenia.

The Right Place.

THERE are thousands of persons in places where they do not belong. The bird's wing means air, the fish's fin means water, the horse's hoof means solid ground; and what would happen if the bird tried the water, and the fish tried the air, happens when men get out of their natural element. Some are to go ahead; they are the prow. Some are to stay behind and guide those who lead; they are the helm. Some are to be enthusiastic and carry the flag; they are the masts. Some are to do nothing but act as a dead weight; they are shovelled in as ballast. Some are to fume and fret and blow; they are the valves. Our happiness and success depend on being where we belong. A scow may be admirable, and a seventy-four gun-ship may be admirable, but do not put the scow on the ocean, or the ship-of-the-line in the mill-pond. Fortune is spoken of as an old shrew, with hot water, shovel, and tongs, pursuing the innocent. But, though sometimes losing her temper, she mostly approves those who are in their sphere, and condemns those who are where they do not belong.

How, then, account for the success of such persons as Elihu Burritt and Hugh Miller—the former a blacksmith, yet showing unbounded capacity for the acquisition of language; the latter a stone mason, and [illegible] one of the old buried Titans come to life, pressing up through rocks and mountains, until, shaking from his coat a world of red sandstone, and washing off from his hands the dust of millions of years, he takes the professor's chair in a college? We answer, different men want different kinds of colleges. The anvil was the best school-desk of Elihu Burritt, and the quarry-stone for Hugh Miller. The former, among the cinders and horse-shoes, learned that patient toil which was the secret of his acquisition of the languages. The latter, from observations made while toiling with chisel and crowbar, laid the foundation of his wonderful attainments, one shelf of rock being worth to him more than the hundred shelves of a college library.

Let the young be sure to begin right. Not once in a thousand times does a man successfully change occupations. The sea of life is so rough that you cannot cross over from one vessel to another except at great peril of falling between. Many have fallen down to nothing between the mason's trowel and the carpenter's saw; between the lawyer's brief and the author's pen; between the medicine-chest and the pulpit. It is no easy matter to switch off on another track this thundering express-train of life. A daffodil and a buttercup resolved to change places with each other, but in crossing over from stem to stem they fell at the feet of a heart's-ease. "Just as I expected!" said Heart's-ease, "You might better have staid in your places!"

Ill in Church.

THE best of men and women will sometimes sicken in a meeting-house. There will be something in the poor ventilation, or in the dullness and protractedness of the sermon, or the ill-health of the auditor, to make him faint. Let there be all sympathy and delicacy evidenced in removing the patient to an adjoining room, and resuscitating him. If nothing better than selfishness influence, let us be attentive and helpful, since our turn to faint may come next. But one thing we protest against, and that is that when a person faints in church all the curious people go out to see what is the matter, and hinder the resuscitation by standing close around the sufferer when his or her chief want is not a gaping crowd, but fresh air. We were one Sabbath preaching in a village church in Northern New York. Whether it was our sermon that sickened her, or the heat of the day, we never knew; but a young lady excited all our sympathies by getting faint. Her father and mother and sister and lover and the sexton went out with her, as was proper for them to do. But in addition to that, an old lady sitting beside the pulpit, and whose characteristic was inquisitiveness, glided down the aisle. This started all the other old ladies, for it was uncertain now whether the old lady aforesaid had taken sick herself, or whether she had gone out to administer to the first patient. The old ladies having departed, the old gentlemen felt as if it would be no more than gallant to go too, and so they joined in the procession. The middle-aged people in the congregation seeing the elderly people go out, felt that it was mean to let the older people put themselves to so much trouble, while they, the middle-aged, sat indifferent, and therefore many of them, urged by this piece of circumstance, went out also. As the middle-aged men were departing, they met the old men coming in to get their hats, the latter promising in the aisle, in a low grumble of conversation, to rejoin the former on the grass. By this time the children in the church had no one to look after them, and as some of them had never seen anybody faint, they went out on a tour of discovery, till we turned around in the pulpit to the minister behind us and suggested we go likewise. But as he protested, we tarried. We found out afterward that the maiden was only a little sick, but they crowded around her so closely that she had no chance at all, and so succumbed to nervousness. Let this be remembered, that six persons are all that at such times can be serviceable in the most urgent and painful case, and that beyond that the people who crowd around are a nuisance and a hindrance. After you find that enough have offered their services, better retire. There are inquisitive people who go to funerals, and go early, so that they can see the family take leave of the corpse, and that kind of people love to stand around a sick person, telling afterward how pale she looked, how her fingers clutched, and what words in her momentary aberration she uttered.

OUR MAIL-BAG.

"Subscriber," Napanee, Ont., Canada. I should like to have the ten books you offer with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD if it were not for the customs duty I should have to pay. Can you tell me how much it would amount to?

You would have no duty to pay. The proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD pays the customs duty and express charges. Subscribers in Canada can thus get the Library on the same terms as those in the United States. If you send the three dollars you will receive the Library and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for a year, without any further expense whatsoever.

D. Mechley, Jr., New York City. Where in the Bible is it stated that Satan was cast out of heaven?

See Luke 10: 18 and Rev. 12: 7-9.

A. F. P., Boston, Mass. I have heard the word "Mascot" applied to the goat which bore away the sins of the people, and also to Christ as being "our Mascot." Is that a proper use of the word?

We think it an improper and irreverent term, in such a connection. Mascot is derived from a French word which means a gambler's fetish or luck-bringer. Another interpretation gives "ma escot," ("my share" or "lot,") as the true derivation.

Old Subscriber, London, Ont. Please state in THE MAIL-BAG if one subscriber can get both the Bible and Library premiums?

Yes; by sending $5 you can have your subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD renewed for one year and you will receive the Library premium and the Bible (leather lined, silk sewed, and red under gold edges); or for $4 you can secure the renewal, the Library, and a Bible with plain gold edges.

Laurel, N. J. Shall we have any work to do in heaven?

A life without occupation is inconceivable. One of the great equipments for such occupation will be the enjoyment of perpetual youth—implying strength for service. Unquestionably it will be a life of intense activity—a busy place, with high avocations suited to the varied degrees of skill and to the endowments of the redeemed. Throughout the Scriptures, the future life is invariably represented as a state of active service. Even the Almighty One is not idle. See Rev. 7: 15; Mark 16: 20; John 5: 17 and like passages.

F. Norton, Perris, Cal. Is it right to marry on the Sabbath day?

Christian people usually choose some other day, for the reason that the celebration of a marriage usually involves much work that should not be performed on the Sabbath, viz.: the preparation of elaborate dinners or suppers, and such entertainment as usually accompanies wedding festivities, all engaging the time of indoor and outdoor servants. If the marriage ceremony—which is a sacrament—could be divested of such accompaniments as we have indicated and performed in its simplicity, there could be no objection to Sunday marriages.

J. L. G., Tracey, Cal. What is the width of the Red Sea at the point where the Israelites crossed?

It is generally held by a majority of writers and travelers that the passage was made at Ras Atakah Point, about six miles south of Suez, and opposite the southern end of Jebel Atakah. At Ras Atakah, the land runs out in the form of a promontory for fully a mile into the sea beyond the regular shore line. Beyond this, there is a shoal for nearly a mile more, over which the tide-water at low tide is usually about fourteen feet deep. Beyond this, and before the true channel or centre is reached, there are two other comparative shoals; the channel itself is somewhere about fifty feet deep and three quarters of a mile wide. There is another succession of shoals on the eastern shore. The distance from shore to shore is about five and a-half miles.

E. Gemmell, Richmond, Va. What are the names of the books omitted from the Bible. Why were they omitted?

The excluded books are known as "Apocrypha," and are as follows: I. Esdras, II. Esdras, Tobit, Judith, several chapters of Esther which are found neither in the Hebrew nor the Chaldee, The Wisdom of Solomon, The Wisdom of Jesus, son of Sirach, or Ecclesiasticus, Baruch, The Song of the Three Holy Children, The History of Susanna, The History of the Destruction of Bel and the Dragon, The Prayer of Manasseh, I. Maccabees, II. Maccabees. They were excluded by the early Christian Church on the ground that they were of doubtful authority and not tending to spiritual edification. This decision has never been reversed, although in some periods of the Church's history a number of the apocryphal writings were published in smaller type after the regular books in the Bible. At one time the volume of apocryphal writings was even larger than the genuine, but very many of them, being rejected, quickly perished.

C. Neiser, Butler, Ga., writes:

In answer to the question C. H., in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of Nov. 13, I send the lines:

With patient mind thy course of duty run;
God nothing does, nor suffers to be done,
But thou couldst do thyself, couldst thou but see
The end of all events as well as he.

They were written by Byron.

A. M., Mechanicsburg, Pa. I have reasons for believing that God has called me to labor for him in the ministry; but I have contracted debts which at present I am unable to pay. Should I be right in hearkening to the voice of God and allowing my friends to lose their money?

Your duty to God stands before all; but we do not think your entering the ministry is your duty. When God calls a man to devote his whole life to his work, he makes the way plain by removing difficulties, and he has not done so in your case. It would bring a reproach on the Christian name for you to act dishonorably in order to enter the ministry, and we do not believe that God would bless your labors. He that serves God acceptably must have clean hands.

B. J. Hillard, Mich. According to Scripture, how high a rate of interest may a Christian take without being guilty of taking usury?

No rate is fixed in Scripture. Your own conscience must guide you. As a general principle you may take it that usury is taking advantage of the borrower's necessities. There are circumstances which justify a higher rate than others, as when the lender straitens himself to help another, or when the borrower is using it in a very profitable enterprise and the loan enables him to make a large gain. The wrong is done when the lender, ascertaining that the borrower is in urgent need and unable to get money elsewhere, avails himself of the opportunity to exact from him an unreasonable sum for the use of the money, thus profiting by the misfortune of the borrower.

T. O. B., Orbisonia, Pa. Does not the principle of denominationalism involve the possibility of every family being a church by itself? If the Apostles organized only one church, surely some churches must be wrong.

While unity is to be desired, and most Christians would sacrifice much to attain it, this disposition to condemn those who differ from us should not be cherished. There are honest differences of opinion as to the teachings of the New Testament. The Methodist, who prefers to have his church governed by conferences, has just as much right to think his system right as the Congregationalist, who prefers every church to be self-governing. The Baptist, again, believes that the only valid baptism is by immersion of the believer, while the Presbyterian believes that he is right in baptizing the infant by sprinkling. Differences of opinion on these matters are to be regretted, but so long as each is fully convinced in his own mind that he is following the will of God, it would be an unwarrantable assumption for one to condemn the other as wrong.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

Prince and Princess Betrothed.

OFFICIAL announcement is made of an approaching marriage which will be another bond of union between the royal families of England and Denmark. The Princess Maud, youngest daughter of the Prince of Wales, has been betrothed to her cousin, Prince Karl, second son of her mother's brother, the heir-apparent to the Danish throne. English society is, it appears, taking a great interest in the match, as the Princess is the most popular of all the royal family and has endeared herself to the people by her kindly, genial ways. She is twenty-six years of age and is much like her mother, who has a strong hold on the loyal affection of the English nation. Around her father's home at Sandringham, she is as well known as in London and the cottagers in the neighborhood often receive visits from her. It is her delight to slip away from court circles and make informal calls among her humble friends. Gossip tells of an embarrassing tribute to her charms which resulted from one of these excursions. Visiting her old governess incognita, as plain "Miss Mills," she mixed with the company at a family party and so captivated the heart of an impressionable young farmer present, who had no idea of her rank, that he made her a formal offer of marriage and was very persistent in his wooing. Prince Karl, her prospective husband, is twenty-three years old. He and the Princess have known each other from childhood. They were playmates in those pleasant times when the grandchildren of the king and queen of Denmark, the children of their two daughters, the Empress of Russia and the Princess of Wales, assembled in the old Danish castle and, forgetting that they were princes and princesses, played together as boys and girls. The friendship of the two children has now developed into love, and though the English people are disappointed that their favorite princess is not to remain among them, like her eldest sister, the Duchess of Fife, they are glad she is marrying for love and not for reasons of state. In their domestic relations, men and women of illustrious birth can find happiness only in the same way as ordinary people do—through their affections, and they can gain eternal happiness in no other way than is open to every one, through love of Christ and devotion to him.

For there is no respect of persons with God (Rom. 2: 11.)

Unconscious Reciprocity.

A singular coincidence is reported by the Boston Transcript. It appears that during the recent foggy weather two schooners were out on a fishing expedition in the South Channel. Their names were the Fortuna and the Emma. Before the fog came up, a dory left each vessel with two men in each. The vessels were a long way apart, and neither the men on the vessels nor those in the dories had any communication with each other. The fog came up very suddenly and each dory made for the vessel it belonged to. But the fog became so dense that the attempt was futile. After several hours of vain endeavor, the men in the Fortuna's dory abandoned the search. While they were aimlessly drifting they were sighted from the Emma and were taken on board. They were landed at Provincetown, whence they proceeded to Boston. The Emma entered the harbor with her flag at half-mast, her crew deploring the loss of their two shipmates. But the flag was soon raised. The Fortuna was in the harbor with the two men on board, she having rescued them in the fog. Thus each vessel had rescued the other's stray, a coincidence unprecedented in the annals of the fishing industry. If the principle on which those two crews acted were commonly followed in the church, more souls might be saved. All four men might have been lost if the crews had been intent only on saving men who belonged to their ships. A man in need of salvation ought to be an object of concern to Christians of every denomination, even though he be a stranger.

As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men. (Gal. 6: 10.)

Profiting by a Kindness.

An alumnus of Dartmouth College tells in the college journal a romantic story of the benefit he derived from an act of kindness. He was at the college commencement, and the chapel being crowded, he had climbed into a window that he might hear the orator of the day. He had to balance himself with one foot on the window sill and the other on the railing of the pews. Several other students followed his example, till the window was full. Outside was a young farmer who had fixed a plank slantwise against an adjacent wall, so that he could see and hear through the window, but now his view was cut off and he might as well have been at home. He was grievously disappointed and appealed to the young men to give him a hand so that he could climb up too. But he was told to be content where he was, as if they tried to help him they would probably fall out. One young man, however, pitying the farmer's disappointment, helped him up, and, to his intense delight the farmer heard the oration as he balanced himself on the window and the plank. He was profuse in his thanks, but the student made light of the service he had rendered. He forgot the circumstance until he went to call on a young lady whom he was anxious to make his wife. She referred him to her eldest brother, to whom in some trepidation he went with his suit. He was astonished to find that the brother was not altogether a stranger. He was the farmer whom he had helped with the plank. The farmer recognized him at once, and the suitor found the slight service he had rendered an excellent introduction. The farmer thought the student must be a kindly man, to whom his sister's future might be safely intrusted. Thus by his kindly act to a stranger he had unwittingly made a friend of the man whose good opinion was of so much importance to him. He is not the first or only man who has had reason to rejoice that, out of pure good will and without expecting to derive any personal benefit to himself, he did a kindness to a stranger.

Thereby some have entertained angels unawares. (Heb. 13: 2.

PRINCESS MAUD OF WALES.

A Medium Exposed.

The detection of a fraud has caused a sensation among the spiritualists of Boston, Mass. The Post of that city, reports that one of the most famous mediums of the day was caught in a trick at a recent meeting of the Society of Psychical Research. The medium was a woman who was said to have remarkable occult powers. She gave a seance before the Society and astonished every one by her wonderful feats. The musical instruments played and moved through the air, though no one was in the part of the room where they were, and while the medium was supposed to be in the cabinet at the other end of the room. A sceptical spectator, however, suspected that it was she, and not spirits, who was handling the instruments, and determined to apply a test at her next seance. He provided himself with a few pieces of phosphorescent paper which he contrived to sprinkle on the medium's hair, unknown to her, before lowering the lights. In the darkness the paper emitted a faint, lambent glow, like a nimbus which could be plainly seen by every one in the room, except the medium herself. In a few minutes the phenomena began as usual, but when a tambourine sounded in one corner of the room, the illuminated head was seen there and it could be seen passing from one part of the room to another, until the laughter of the spectators showed her that she was detected. Then her mortification was extreme. It was with her as it is with so many; she was not ashamed of doing wrong, but that people should see her doing it. Yet none can conceal their actions from him whose judgment is more important than any other.

For his eyes are upon the ways of man and he seeth all his goings. Job 34: 21.

Respecting a Dead Man's Presentiment.

Two watchmen have been on duty day and night for a week at a cemetery at Newburgh, N.Y. They have been watching the remains of a wealthy citizen who died recently. He had a presentiment that he would be buried alive and left directions as to the precautions to be taken to prevent that horrible fate. The casket was to be placed in an open room in the cemetery and its lid was not to be screwed down for a period of thirty days after his supposed death. It was to be watched day and night, so that if he was only in a trance and not dead, he might find no difficulty, on regaining consciousness, in rising from his casket. Arrangements were made in accordance with his directions, but at the end of a week, decomposition had proceeded so far that there could be no doubt as to his death, and the casket was therefore screwed down and consigned to the grave. It may be hoped that he was prepared for that contingency also. As he looked forward to the time when his body would be laid in the coffin, and had considered what would happen if he were alive then, one hopes he did not overlook what would happen if he were really dead. The fate he dreaded, terrible as it must be, cannot be so appalling as the second death, which awaits all who have not made their peace with God through Christ.

Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power (Rev. 20: 6).

BRIEF NOTES.

Our Canadian Readers will be Glad to know that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has made arrangements to have its premiums delivered at all points in Canada customs duty and express charges prepaid.

At the Recent Meeting in Chicago of the Board of Church Extension of the Methodist Episcopal Church, it was stated that the receipts for the past year were $171,237, of which amount conference collections furnished $127,743; personal gifts, $11,871, and bequests, $6,776. The disbursements included $103,399 in gifts to the churches.

Miss Frances E. Willard Announces the purpose of the W. C. T. U. to begin social settlement work in Chicago. After a careful study of the work in England and this country she believes that it offers the best practical means of reaching a class of children in the city who are otherwise inaccessible, and also of keeping many from going back who have felt the effect of good influences.

A Number of Junior Christian Endeavorers in Tennessee have made a peculiar arrangement with their parents for help in the cause of missions. They are children of farmers and are now allowed to take all eggs laid by the hens on Sundays and sell them, devoting the proceeds to the Christian Endeavor contributions to the Foreign Mission Boards.

From the Recent Reports of the Excise Commissioners it appears that Brooklyn, with a population of about a million has 4699 places in which liquor may be sold. Boston with about half a million population has 690 saloons; Philadelphia 1354, and New York 7300.

A Number of Soldiers at Fort Houston, Antonio, Tex., organized a Christian Endeavor Society some time ago, which now has ninety members. By its efforts a Sunday School has been established and a mid-week devotional meeting.

Leonard Weaver, the English Evangelist has been making an evangelistic tour in Pennsylvania. At Harrisburg, Altoona, Sunbury, and Mt. Carmel the meetings have been largely attended and there have been many conversions. Letters addressed to him at Grimsby, Ont., Canada will be forwarded to him.

A Religious Revival of Remarkable power is sweeping through Colorado College. A correspondent of The Independent says that it is the outgrowth of the earnest spirit that has pervaded the institution for a long time, and the large society hall is crowded at the daily service which is held there.

The Meetings Held by Rev. J. H. Herbener of Louisville, Ky., at Liberty, Mo., have resulted in extensive gains to the churches. There were frequently over a thousand persons crowded into the tent during the meetings. Mr. Herbener was assisted by the Kirby family, whose musical service was greatly appreciated.

A Call has Been Issued for a National, Christian Conference to be held at Atlanta, Ga., Dec. 18 and 19. The object is to consider the vital issues of the hour as to the liquor traffic and other moral questions, in the hope of uniting Christain citizens of all denominations in an effort to secure legislation on Christian principles in the State Legislatures and in Congress. All information about the Conference may be obtained by addressing Mr. S. T. Nicholson, Atlanta, Ga.

Rev. Thomas Harrison's Services at the Walnut M. E. Church, Cincinnati, O., have resulted in a large number of conversions. At the close of the second week over three hundred had been recorded. The religious movement was so deep that on several days two special prayer meetings were called to plead with God for a continuance of the glorious influence. Mr. Harrison said that in all his experience he had never been so thankful.

Dr. L. W. Munhall has Just Closed a Three Weeks' evangelistic campaign in Eau Claire, Wis. Six churches united in the work. It is an encouraging fact that the most active and earnest helpers in the movement were persons who were converted in the evangelical services held by Dr. Munhall in the city twelve years ago. Dr. Munhall is now holding meetings at Binghampton, N. Y., in which five denominations are co-operating.

The Rev. Mr. Jowett, the Young Minister who succeeds the late Dr. R. W. Dale as pastor of Carr's Lane Chapel, Birmingham, gave a caution to the church at his installation which may be useful to other churches who call a young minister to succeed a very eminent divine. Mr. Jowett said: "Don't expect another Dr. Dale. Second, don't expect the same presentation of the truth. You have a right to expect the presentation of the same truth, but not the same presentation of the truth. Third, don't expect—I don't think you will—autumn ripeness in a spring season."

FATHER AGAINST SON

OR,

How the Curse of Horse-Head House was Lifted

BY J. C. COWDRICK.

CHAPTER III.

WHEN Will Hilton came in sight of his home he could see the brilliant reflection from the bar-room windows upon the falling snow, and when he got nearer he caught the voices of the merry roysterers within.

If he had disliked his father's business before, he now detested it with an intensity that was almost hatred against his parent as well. He was on the opposite side of the street, and when he had gone a little farther he could look in at the windows.

Reuben Hilton's windows were not curtained; it was his boast that he kept a respectable place and had nothing to conceal from the public.

Will saw the young men of the town making merry, some of them too tipsy to stand still or walk straight; and, in his mind's eye, he saw his father behind the bar dealing out liquor to them.

The bar could not be seen from the street, but was in an alcove between the bar-room proper and the pool-room. Not but that the landlord would have been glad to have that in plain sight, too, as he boastfully declared, but his customers preferred a little privacy, he explained.

Neither could the interior of the pool-room be seen from the street, its windows opening underneath a piazza, the under part of which was enclosed.

Will watched the scene for a few moments, then crossed the street with an aching heart.

He went around the house and entered by a rear way, and silently sought his room without being seen. But he did not enter the room to sleep that night. He made it a night of prayer.

The hour was late when the noise of the bar-room finally ceased and Will heard his father closing the house. Soon after he heard him coming up the stairs, and his heart almost stopped beating when he heard the footsteps turn in the direction of his room.

He had desired that the interview might not take place till the morning.

Reuben Hilton went straight to the door of his son's room and knocked, calling:

"Will!"

"Yes, sir;" was the prompt response.

"I will attend to opening the house myself in the morning."

That was all he said, and turned immediately away before any rejoinder could be offered.

Will hardly knew what to make of this. It told him one thing, that his father had heard of his conversion; but whether this course was favorable to him or not, he could not quite decide.

It was Will's duty to get up first in the morning, open the house, and tend the bar until his father took charge later on. The landlord being up late every night, slept later in the morning. This plan had given Will the lighter duties, and also the sleep his nature demanded.

At an early hour Will heard his father astir.

He waited until he had heard him attend to his [illegible] and do the [illegible] around the house, and then he went down.

He knew his father was at leisure, then, and had an hour in which to doze by the fire, unless some one happened to drop in, which was rarely the case, quite so early, [illegible]

When he entered the bar-room he found his father pacing the floor, hands locked behind his back and his head bowed. Reuben Hilton wheeled about on hearing the door close, and father and son faced each other. For a moment neither spoke. Will was the first to do so.

"Father," he said, "I have come down to have a talk with you."

"You have, eh?" was the demand, in louder voice. "Well, I want to have the same with you, but not now. Go back to your bed, for you have got to tend bar for me to-night."

Will's face blanched for an instant, and then flushed furiously.

He understood now the meaning of his father's words; he realized that the battle had been opened.

"No," he said, respectfully but firmly, "I must have a talk with you, father. I know that you have heard, and that——"

"Yes," cried the father, "I have heard that you have been making a fool of yourself, if that is what you mean, and I am going to take that kind of foolishness out of you; do you understand that?"

"But, father, let me tell you——"

"I don't want to hear anything about it; you have heard what I have to say. It is going to be as I say. I want that young preacher and all his crew to understand that when they meddle with my affairs they have run up against a snag! They can't make a fool of me, and I am going to see to it that they don't make one of you, either, my young gentleman!"

"Do not blame anyone but me, father; it——"

"Not blame anyone but you, eh? Then it's you have turned this whole town upside down and inside out, is it?"

"But, father——"

"No but about it! You prepare yourself to tend bar here this afternoon and to-night."

"Father, I cannot do it."

"What! What is that?"

"I say that I cannot do it——"

"We'll see about that, young man! You are not of age yet, and you will do as I say. You are going to tend bar here this afternoon and to-night, and that settles it!"

"Will you let me say what I want to say to you, father?"

"Not a word, sir! I am the one to do the saying, yet awhile, in this establishment. I am going to put an end to this craze, so far as my own family is concerned, and you will find it out so. I want no psalm-singing and prayer-whining around me, and the sooner you make up your mind to it, the better!"

"My mind is made up, father."

"And so is mine! Do you hear me? So is mine! You will obey me, or you will leave my house for good and all!"

Reuben Hilton had allowed his voice to become louder and louder, in his passion, and his face was white to the lips. Will was calmer than he had been at first, but he was not defiant.

"Then you drive me from home, father, for I can never pass another drop of liquor over that bar," he said quietly. "You may kill me, but I never can do it; I had rather die than do it."

"You mean to say that you will not obey me, that you will not do it?"

"I cannot do it."

"Well, we'll see about that. You may take your choice of two things: You will either obey me, or you will pack up the little that belongs to you and get out of my house. I give you till noon to make up your mind."

"My mind was made up yesterday, father; I will go at once. Useless for me to lay my plan before you, now, so I have nothing to say. You had it in your power to help me, if you would, but no matter. I counted all this before I took the step, and I accept it willingly."

Nothing defiant, nothing disrespectful; a cool, calm statement.

Reuben Hilton looked at his son in amaze. In his heart he knew that no power on earth could break that will, and yet, in the face of that, he grimly resolved that he would undertake it.

"You will change your mind, I think, when you come to face the world and get a taste of its hard knocks. What can you do? You have no trade; it was not necessary to give you one, when I had this fine business to hand down to you. You are a fool; I can call you nothing else. That is, you want to be, but I am not going to allow it; I will make you do my bidding, if I have to use force!"

"No, father; you have given me my choice of two things, and I have chosen."

"I am going to make that condition still more severe, then: If you leave my house you will be no son of mine, for I will disown you; not a penny of my little fortune shall you ever touch!"

"Very well; I had also thought of that, and it was the least of the things that made me hesitate. I will say good-by, father; I know what your will is, and mine is like it; it is useless for us to talk any further. I will get ready, and will leave your roof as soon as I have seen mother and Mary to say good-by to them."

With that, Will turned and left the room, a man in fact, even if not quite so legally. He had made his decision and accepted the consequences, and, with God's help, he would never draw back! But, this was only the beginning of his trial; the worst was yet to come. He had still to meet his mother and sister, and, which he could not foresee, there was yet to come a worse conflict with his father.

He returned to his room, where he selected such clothes as would be of most service to him, and yet as few as might be, in order to make his bundle as small as possible. Having arranged these into a bundle, after having put some extra garments on his person in order to reduce the size of the bundle still more, he took a farewell survey of the room that had been his for so many years, and, with tears in his eyes, made his way down the rear stairs and out of the house by the rear way. It was just daylight, the snow was deep, and the weather was biting cold.

CHAPTER IV.

Tried in the Crucible.

On that morning the household was astir earlier than usual.

Reuben Hilton's loud words in the bar-room had awakened everybody beneath his roof.

When Will came back from the wagon-house, where he had gone to leave his bundle for the time being, he was met by his mother and sister as he entered the door of the rear hall.

They had no need to ask what was the matter; they knew; but they did not know the result of that interview.

"You foolish boy!" his sister chided. "What did you want to go and do anything so ridiculous for?"

"For the reason, Mary, that I had weighed the matter well and made up my mind that it was the right thing to do," was the plain answer.

"But, you will have to give it up, since your father objects," spoke his mother. "Christian notions and hotel-keeping do not go hand in hand, as you must know well enough."

"I am aware of it, mother; I am going away as soon as I have said good-by."

"Going away!"

So cried Mrs. Hilton and her daughter, as with one voice.

"Yes; father insists that I must tend bar, and as I can never do that again, I must go. But I was going, anyhow; only I thought——"

"You thought what, Will?" asked his mother.

"Never mind; that is what I wanted to say to father, but he would not allow me to tell him, so let it pass. It was merely a plan, in which I thought he might help me if he would."

"Maybe he will," said Mary.

Mrs. Hilton was a small, pale woman; the daughter was larger, and had the same full habit of body as her father and brother. She was about eighteen years old, and handsome.

"No, he has made up his mind," said Will, "and nothing will change him."

"Then tell us," begged his mother.

"No use, mother; you cannot do it if you would, so we will say no more about it."

"But where are you going? You must not leave us in this way, William; indeed you must not—you shall not! I will see your father, and have him forbid it. Do you want to kill me?"

"Mother, listen: Nothing you can do can change the situation. This parting is as hard for me as it can be for you, but I am able to take care of myself, and you need not have any concern about me. As for you, Mary, you must take all the more care of mother. And now, good-by!"

He had kissed each of them while speaking, and immediately turned and went out again, and they saw him going in the direction of the out-buildings.

"He certainly meant it, mamma!" cried Mary.

"Yes, yes; I will go and tell his father. He must stop him, somehow!"

"Think of the disgrace it will be!"

"Yes, yes!"

Mrs. Hilton ran along the hall in the direction of the bar-room, while Mary opened the door and called to her brother to come back.

Will heard her, but made no response. He guessed what she wanted, and since it would only necessitate a second parting, what was the use of going back? The matter had been settled between him and his father; they could not change it.

Meanwhile, Reuben Hilton had been pacing the floor of the bar-room more furiously than ever in his life before.

He had resumed his march up and down as soon as the door had closed after Will when he went out, and his anger rose with each passing minute. He felt that he had been beaten.

What did his will and authority amount to, if a boy, not yet of age, could ride over him like that? And all the doings of that fool preacher, as he denominated him, and the mere fool flock that he had gathered around him! Must he stand tamely by and see his family broken up, his business ruined, and—

He had about reached that point when his wife entered hastily.

"Reuben! Reuben?" she hurriedly exclaimed, "you must stop William; he intends to leave his home—in fact, he has gone! Think of the shame! Oh! he must not go, Reuben; you must not allow him to go!"

"Where is he, Martha? Which way did he start?"

"He went in the direction of the barn."

"I'll attend to him!"

Grabbing his hat from a hook near the door, he left the room in haste, hurried along the hall and out.

It had been growing lighter every minute, and it was now full daylight, or very nearly so. He had no trouble in telling which way Will had gone, for the tracks led him to the wagon-house.

Will was still there; he had stopped to kneel for a moment in prayer before turning his back upon his home.

He did not hear his father coming, in the deep snow, and so it happened that Reuben Hilton found him upon his knees, and heard his own name fall from his lips with earnest accent.

His rage scarce knew bounds—if it was all rage; perhaps there was a sting of the conscience added.

Near at hand was a huge "blacksnake" whip, a terrible instrument of its kind, and seizing that, he fairly wound its lithe lash around the body of his son with all his strength.

The whistle of the whip as it cut the air was the first knowledge Will had of his father's presence, and the blow fell almost the same instant.

It wrung a low cry of pain from the youth, and he leaded to his feet and sprang at his father like a tiger.

Reuben jumped back, raised the whip and struck again.

Again the lash wound itself around the body of his son, its tip snapping a hole in the sleeve of his coat.

"Praying for me, were you!" the enraged parent cried. "I'll have none of that, you whiner! I'll bet I will take the religious fervor out of you, and instil some common sense!"

Will had been stung to action by the first cut, but he bethought himself in the next instant and dropped his arms to his and spoke but one word—a low, sorrowful exclamation: "Father!"

THE MESSAGE OF CHRISTIANITY.

Suggestions on the Christian Endeavor Topic for the Week Beginning Dec. 22. Isaiah 52 : 7-15.

DID the great prophet, looking over the centuries before him, see the angelic vision and hear with prophetic ear the strains of the celestial music which long afterwards filled the hearts of the shepherds with joy? It would seem so, for the message, over which he exults, was the very song that the seraphic hosts sang on the Bethlehem plains. "How beautiful he exclaims," and our hearts echo his cry. "Peace and good-will to men," was a message to which the world was a stranger. Only in this late day are we beginning to realize how truly the angels interpreted the event they celebrated. The world misinterpreted the mission of the divine Child. Its perversity turned his advent into discord, so that, as he foresaw, it brought not peace, but a sword, for many generations. But now, while blatant demagogues and rapacious monarchs call for war, the followers of the Babe in the manger demand peace and are full of good-will. As his followers multiply and are more thoroughly imbued with his spirit, that demand will gain volume and power, until at last, war shall no more devastate the blood-soaked earth, and the hand of brotherhood and good-will shall be extended from land to land. Never did a potentate enter the world with so welcome a message. Men were looking up to heaven with fear and dread, and on each other with suspicion and hatred. From around that manger-cradle came the new evangel, bidding them render joyful praise to God and loving greetings to their fellows. They had been brutes with brutal passions and instincts; they were bidden to be men with God-like spirits.

The way to the blissful consummation is clear to the prophetic eye. "Touch no unclean thing," is his exhortation. Purity and holiness are the path to peace. Pollution, that had come from grovelling in the slime and filth of iniquity, was to be washed away. The fountain was opened for sin and uncleanness and into the new way no man should carry the soil and taint of his degradation. Relieved of his burden, purified from his corruption, he was to be received into sonship and become like God, fit to see him as he is. The message of Christianity is a call from the hills, a beckoning upward. He that hears it in his soul must rise. The earth no more monopolizes his thoughts, the pleasures it offers no longer satisfy his nature, the appetites and passions of his body no longer engross his thoughts. He ceases to be a mere animal and longs for spiritual development. God has redeemed him and he is a slave no longer. Wherever the message is carried, it has the same effect. In the slums of our cities, in the vicious resorts of aristocratic debauchery, in the dull, stupid ignorance of benighted misery, in the dark places of heathendom, the message produces the same results. The vicious become pure, the savage gentle, the despairing hopeful, the sordid generous. Like a potent leaven, it moves the soul and, however strong the bonds that hold it, they are loosened and, in spite of the attractions of time and sense, the spirit soars to the higher joys and higher attainments of the Christian life, that it sees with its new vision.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor, and also upon those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

THE SEA OF LIFE.

AH! who is such a coward that he puts not not out to sea,
Though fresh the breeze and white the waves that roll on restlessly;
Who moors in some fair harbor when work is to be done,
And passes idle hours alone, from morn till setting sun?

Who moves along the harbor sides, when far, far out from land
His Master's work is to be done and he can see the hand
That beckons ever onward, while a voice cries true and brave.
"Come o'er the crested waters, fear not tide nor angry wave!"

If tiny is thy bark and frail, ne'er fear the tossing wave,
Though many stauncher crafts than thine have found a treacherous grave;
Yonder's the Light, and floating buoys mark
plain the hidden reef,
Then trusting make thy way straight on—thou canst not come to grief.

No coward craft that saileth not, but idly lies at ease,
For fear of storms, the lightning's flash, or hungry yawning seas,
Has failed the doom it feared to meet, for when the angry gale
Came shrieking on, it wrecked the fleet that dared not outward sail.

Then do thy work the Master gives, press on,
do not delay;
If you he calls, take courage, hasten forward and obey;
For he has marked thy pathway, thou canst not fail when he,
Who stilled the waters with his "peace," is safely guiding thee.

"I WILL MEET YOU, BROTHER."*

Written for "The Christian Herald."

"I will meet you, meet you, brother,
In that land forever blest,
Far away beyond the shadows,
Where the soul shall find its rest.
Here the home is broken, brother,
And the twilight lingers long,
But the glorious day is coming,
When I'll join your happy throng.

"I will meet you, meet you, brother,
At the dawning of the day,
When the long and weary vigils
Of the night have passed away.
This the hope my heart still comforts,
We shall clasp glad hands once more—
We shall meet again, my brother,
To be severed nevermore.

"I will meet you, meet you, brother,
Swift the day is drawing nigh;
Sadness yields before the dawning,
Light is breaking o'er the sky;
Soon my weary feet will enter
Through the pearly gates of home,
And I'll meet you, safely meet you,
Never, nevermore to roam."

THE APOCALYPTIC SEALS.

Four Already Fulfilled, Two in Course of Preparation, and the Seventh Retrospective

BY REV. W. GIRDLESTONE.

THE seven seals in the sixth and seventh chapters of Revelation give us in a short sketch the whole state of Christ's church militant here on earth, from the First to the Second Advent of Christ. The first four have run their course.

In the first seal the Church of Christ is represented by St. John as arising in its purity; in the second he saw corruption and persecution in the church rising to a head; in the third he observed deep corruption and depression under tyrannical power; and in the fourth was portrayed the total corruption of Christ's church; the fifth showed him the saints who suffer martyrdom; and in the sixth the kingdom of the stone grows into a mountain.

The first seal opens and discovers a white horse, with a rider armed with a bow, and a crown upon his head, going forth conquering and to conquer. Whiteness is purity; "Though your sins be as scarlet they shall be white as snow;" the horse is a spirit; for in an analogous prophecy in Zech. 6, the red, black, white, and grisled horses are declared to be spirits; the bow an emblem of strength; and the crown, of royalty and priesthood. This seal, then, is the primitive and pure state of Christianity, and represents the preaching of pure Christian truth. And the rider himself is our Priest and King.

The red horse of the second seal represents a spirit degenerate and sinful, fiery and hot, a persecuting zeal. The rider has power given him to disturb the peace of the church; persecutions arise in the church; a great sword is given him, the emblem of power and destruction; of conversion by force; it is great and oppressive. This seal then portrays the time of tyranny, degeneracy, and persecution in the church, when ecclesiastical authority was united to the imperial power, which supported and enforced its corrupt doctrines and oppressive decrees: when persecution to death took place amongst Christians; when they should kill on eanother. The third seal discovers a black horse, and he that sat on him having a yoke or balance in his hand. A dark, gloomy, superstitious spirit of ignorance; bearing, if a yoke, the emblem of slavery; if the balance, of scarcity, even that of which the prophet Amos speaks: "Not a famine of bread, nor a thirst of water, but of hearing the words of the Lord."

The fourth seal discloses a horse, pale, livid, gangrened. I incline to the view that this pale horse represents infidelity, which began its career upon the decline of the black horse of Papacy.

The periods thus typified may be stated as follows: The white horse, in power from the first rise of Christianity to the year A.D. 175; from that period the red horse gained influence, increased and continued in power until the subversion of the Roman Empire, about A. D. 476; the black horse—the Papacy—after this arose and extended his power to the era of the Reformation, A. D. 1530; the pale horse—infidelity—then succeeded and will continue his paralyzing influence, I fear, to the Second Advent.

As regards the fifth and sixth seals, the former describes the fate saints and martyrs suffer under the corruptions and persecutions of the Church, and the latter brings us to the great day of our Lord. And then the seventh seal brings a silence of half-an-hour, of retrospection and awful waiting for the final consummation, followed by the exultant hallelujahs of the glorified Church at Christ's Second Advent.

Two Royal Families.

One Christian and the Other Heathen, and They Present a Singular Contrast.

MANY years have passed away, and more than one generation has come and gone since the missionaries first brought the news of the glorious Gospel of Jesus to the benighted natives of Old Calabar, on the West Coast of Africa. To-day there are few sections of the Dark Continent more thoroughly evangelized. Churches, schools, and many of the accompaniments of a Christian civilization are found on every side. Yet, amid all this progress and enlightenment, there are still found some who cling to the old heathen beliefs, and are enslaved by the dark superstitions that have so long held Africa in thraldom.

On this page are reproduced two photographs, taken in Old Calabar, which present a remarkable contrast. They are the portraits of two native kings and their families. In Africa there are so many royalties that a traveler grows bewildered, until he discovers that the word "king" and "chief" are practically synonymous, and that the ruler of a cluster of huts or a few villages, feels justified in setting up a sort of patriarchal kingship over his few hundred subjects, in which they willingly acquiesce. In such cases there is very little difficulty about royal robes or regalia. A "trade" crown can be procured of an English, German, or Portuguese dealer, and the remainder of the outfit may be as grotesque or inappropriate as majesty pleases—the effect of a quilted robe or a plush cloak will be equally impressive, as far as the monarch's subjects are concerned. One of the kings in the illustration is Duke, a shrewd old heathen (and said to be enormously rich), after whom Duketown, the chief settlement in Old Calabar, is named. In slavery days, Old Calabar was a central depot of supply for the market. King Duke, who is now seventy years of age, lives in a magnificent house imported from England at a cost of several thousand pounds. If its designers could see it now, they would find it in sad disrepair and very dirty. Many efforts have been made to induce Duke to renounce heathenism and become a Christian, but he remains a heathen still. In the photograph, the old man is shown in all the pomp of a double-decker "trade" crown and a quilted dressing-gown, and surrounded by his wife and children.

Placid in expression and with a face that reflects a disposition innately kind and gentle, King Eyo, the central figure in the other photograph, shows us a quite different type of native potentate. Eyo, who died recently, was a Christian, and was called by the traders, "King Honesty," on account of his absolute fairness and "square-dealing," a characteristic of his conduct even before his conversion. His wife and nephew stand beside him in the illustration, the nephew being his successor in the petty kingship which Eyo administered faithfully and creditably. He always had a cordial welcome for the missionaries, and in his country the Gospel has flourished. Eyo's nephew, like the old king himself, is a Christian.

There is a noticeable difference between the two photographs, in the love of display shown by the one group and the quiet dignity and modesty apparent in the other. King Eyo, though he, too, wears the inevitable "trade crown," has a simple cloak, without decoration, as his outer garment, while his wife and nephew are attired in the ordinary dress of civilized communities.

Both these native rulers could doubtless remember the first visit by the missionaries in 1846, when the rulers and people of Duke-Town and Creek-town welcomed them heartily. There are at present in Old Calabar eight mission stations, twenty-four out-stations, twenty-two native agents, over three hundred and fifty church members, and nineteen day-schools, with nearly six hundred scholars. God is still blessing the work begun in this section of Africa to the conversion of many souls.

Dear Old Children.

It is well known that a weakness of the mental faculties, together with feebleness of body, comes with advancing years, and indeed many old people experience a so-called second childhood. Still, sometimes do not children speak of father or mother being in their second childhood, when friends see only the mild quietness and loneliness of old age? For old age, even with the mental faculties unimpaired, must necessarily be lonely, with the friends of one's youth, and frequently one's nearest and dearest, gone. Fashions change, customs alter, friends depart, and the dear aged ones are left behind. The unspeakable loneliness the aged feel is generally borne by them with resignation, yet some few, more energetic than ordinary, dwelling on the past as they do and remembering former happiness, occasionally make a frantic effort to retain it. When to this end they take, what seems to us, very peculiar methods, what a cry is made and how exercised the children are with father's or mother's vagaries. Pressure is brought to bear on the old people, and the commandment "children obey your parents" is reversed.

Choosing Christmas Gifts.

However difficult the task may be to find suitable Christmas gifts, writes Phœbe Hanaford, what are they all, the most costly or the most admired, compared to the love that prompts the effort to obtain them, and the dear mother herself who spares no pains to make her children happy? And this she does the year round. There is always Christmas greeting in her "good-morning," always a wealth of loving kindness in her "good-night, my child." Therefore Christmas comes as naturally to her as sunlight after the morning star. The tastes of each of her children she knows. Their needs she apprehends. Their wants she supplies, if it lies in her power. And in that mother's love they are, in a sense, environed while she teaches them of the coming Christ-child and the value of his mission. Happy is that child to whom the Advent season is one irradiated with love, not shown in gifts alone, but in every kind word and loving tone which seems as an echo of the angel song, and which help so very much to make a merry Christmas.

A Christmas Song.

THERE'S a thrill in the air,
There's a joy in the heart;
There is generous stir
In the home and the mart:
For the Yuletide is with us; make ready to greet
The Child of the Manger; lay gifts at his feet.

No time for complaining,
For envy or strife:
Let the swift-flying hours
With laughter be rife;
Put by all forebodings, your murmuring cease;
All hail One that cometh, the bringer of peace!

If, led by false glitter,
You've wandered afar,
Come back to your loyalty,
Led by the Star;
Give up your vain quest and your wandering wild,
For the pearl of great price is the Wonderful Child.

Ring out the glad carols,
Old strifes put away;
Deck chapel and church
In his honor to-day;
Let the great organs tremble with symphonies grand,
And send the glad tidings all over the land.

O sing, little children,
And sing, young and old;
Though the joy of the Christmas
Can never be told—
But sing and rejoice, with your banners unfurled,
For the Christ that is come is the hope of the world.

Putting Up the Stove.

THE season has come when we can no more depend on the heat of the sun for our comfort. He kindles his fires so late in the morning, and banks them up so early in ashes of cloud at night. Even the extra coat or shawl in the evening time do not seem to do the work expected of them. We have had three or four sharp frosts. In the city we send for a man to come and examine our furnaces, and the lighting of fires is an exciting event.

But in the country there is a day as marked as New Year or Christmas, and that is the day in which we put up the stove. The children fly around with expectation, and are somewhat in the way during the undertaking. The pipes are brought out and emptied, and thumped clear of soot and dust. The housewife goes over all the surfaces with blackening polish, making the homely dark a handsome black, and then the work of carrying the stove into the sitting-room commences. There are not enough hands. There never are. We have put up stoves a dozen times, and never had help enough. Father, with his lower lip clinched on his teeth, lifts and pulls and shoves, and gets fast in the doorway. Mother and the serving-maid come to the rescue, but pull the stove the wrong way, and get an invocation upon their carelessness, "Don't you see what you are doing? Pull it back the other way! Ouch! Just look at the back of my hand, black and blue from this scrouging. There! you have set that right leg of it on my sore toe! My side is stove in!" But with an all-together lift the heavy burden reaches the middle of the room. Now begins the work of finding one of the lost legs. You make up your mind as to where the joints and pieces belong, and insist on their taking their places, but how to insert the larger in the smaller is a conundrum. You rise on the top of a chair to make the last conjunction; when, without the slightest premonition, one of the lower joints backs out of its place, and down all comes with a crash. Language cannot express one's feelings at such a moment.

Every time the attempt is made, the line of pipe parts at a new place, until at last, to the relief of the whole household, the undertaking is completed. Then the first fire is kindled, the smoke at first not knowing whether to come out into the room and be sociable, or go up the chimney and disappear. But at last the great black instrument of comfort roars with a chorus of congratulation and good cheer, and in the evening all the family gather about to hear it laugh and crackle. And the stove is the centre of many a pleasant winter gathering.

Two Sister Evangelists.

Miss Frost and Miss Simpson Preaching and Singing the Gospel and Winning Souls for Christ. Their Work in many Towns.

A REMARKABLE revival work has just closed at the Methodist Episcopal Church, in Seventh Street, New York. Every evening for three weeks past the famous old church has rung with joyful songs, and scenes have been witnessed there which have filled the hearts of God's people with gladness. Whatever denomination a real Christian may call his own, he rejoices to see people renounce lives of pleasure and sin, and resolve in the strength of Christ to live in future for him. The Presbyterian, or the Baptist, or the Congregationalist, loves his own church and glories in its progress, but he is thankful that souls are saved anywhere, or by any means. And this is the work that has been going on in the old Seventh Street Church, which, in the course of its history, has been the birthplace of many souls. There has been little excitement and no hysterical manifestations, but a solemn, earnest, true work of grace. Many have been persuaded to turn to God, who have resisted other appeals and in other churches have sat unmoved under the invitations of the Gospel. Many young people, too, have been led to consecrate themselves to God, and seek that grace which alone is able to keep them safe from the temptations of the world. How much the Church of Christ is indebted for trophies of this kind to Methodist effort will never be known, but the obligation must be enormous. In all our churches and in many of our pulpits there are souls won by the blessing of God on the fire that burned on Methodist altars.

Miss Fanny Simpson and Miss May Frost, Preaching and Singing Evangelists.

The meetings in the Seventh Street Church had an element of novelty in them, in that they were conducted by two ladies. Miss May Frost and Miss Fanny Simpson, whose portraits are on this page, were in charge of the movement. Much has been said against women preaching, but no one could listen to Miss Frost's clear and forcible presentation of the truth or to Miss Simpson's Gospel songs, thrilling with deep feeling, without being glad that the opposition to women's work had not succeeded in silencing these two earnest servants of the Master.

The evangelists give a modest account of their past labors, though they have done much valuable work in the Lord's harvest field. Hitherto their meetings have chiefly been held in the towns of Long Island. At Orient, Cutchogue, Northport, Islip, Babylon, Sea Cliff, Whitestone and Greenpoint they have conducted services with remarkable success. At Setauket the work grew under their hands beyond all expectations. The congregations, small at first, increased daily, and the altar was crowded night after night with anxious seekers after salvation. Several notorious drunkards were converted in course of the revival and many persons of openly irreligious life were led to Christ. If the two young evangelists had been troubled before their visit to Setauket with doubts as to their call to the work of preaching and singing the Gospel, that revival must have set them at rest. God used their efforts, and there is no ordination so authoritative as that.

The two evangelists have been working together about four years. Miss Frost, whose father is of Quaker descent, though her mother is a Methodist, had as a girl an earnest longing to go as a missionary to the heathen. After her conversion, some twelve years ago, this longing increased, but there were difficulties in the way which could not be overcome, and she accepted the disappointment as the leading of Providence. Opportunities for service opened at home. She assisted in special prayer-meetings, addressed Sunday Schools, and in other ways occupied herself in Christ's service, until the manifest tokens of God's blessing became so decided that she felt it her duty to give all her time and effort to the work.

Miss Fanny Simpson is the daughter of a Methodist clergyman, and has been an earnest student of music from childhood. Gifted with a voice of singular sweetness and power, which was carefully trained and cultivated under the best teachers, she looked forward to a distinguished career in the musical profession. Her services were in great request in church choirs and at concerts, and her fame was extending to distant cities, when an event occurred which changed the current of her life. The grace of God touched her heart, and the Spirit led her to consecrate herself and her talents to the service of Christ. From that time her ambition for the concert stage was renounced, and she cared only for the power to reach the heart with melodious Gospel song. When, four years ago, Miss Frost visited Babylon, L.I., where Miss Simpson was then living the opportunity for a life of consecrated service was apparent. The two girls joined their forces and each has proved the complement to the other. Each tells the same message in her own way, and together they have been the means of winning hundreds of souls for Christ. They speak in terms of thankfulness of the way God has honored their trust in him. From the first they resolved to make no bargains for their services, and they have persevered in that course. Whatever the Church pays them is accepted and they have found it sufficient for their needs. From New York they go to Port Washington, L. I., to labor for a few weeks, and early in the new year they have promised to begin services at Stratford, Conn.

e Wrote the Nation's Hymn.

r. S. F. Smith, Author of "America," Passes Away—A Long and Active Christian Life Closed.

AST week there passed away a man whose name has become familiar in every household throughout the Union. Rev. Samuel F. Smith, the author of the famous national hymn, or an "America," died of heart disease in ton, the city of his birth, in his eighty-enth year. Dr. Smith studied at Har-l, and was a classmate of Oliver Wen- Holmes. In 1832 he was graduated n Andover Seminary. He became a tist minister, and for a time edited ie Baptist Missionary Magazine" in :on.

e was afterward chosen as the pas- of a church at Waterville, Me., and at same time was appointed Professor of lern Languages in Waterville College, Colby University. In 1842 he ac- ed the pastorate of the First Baptist rch, of Newton, Mass., and for a time d "The Christian Review." He did ge amount of literary work, mainly in line of hymnology, his most noted osition being "My Country, 'Tis of -, Sweet Land of Liberty," which was en while he was a theological student. missionary hymn, "The Morning it is Breaking," was written at the place. He translated from the Ger- most of the pieces in the "Juvenile " (Boston, 1832), and from the nversations-Lexicon" nearly enough tes to fill a volume of the Encyclopedia rican (1828-32). His collection of ial hymns, poetry and ethical transla- has been published under the title of e Gems" (Boston, 1843); "The nist," a noted Baptist hymn-book 5), and "Rock of Ages" (1866-77). r writings by him are "Life of the e Joseph Grafton," "Missionary hes," "History of Newtons, Mass." bles in Mission Fields," and contri- ns to various periodicals throughout e nion.

L Smith was a phenomenal linguist was constantly learning new lan- s, his list consisting of fifteen—Latin, it Greek, modern Greek, French, an, Italian, Spanish, Swedish, Portu- Hebrew, Arabic, Syriac, Anglo- , Danish and Sanscrit, besides his tongue. He wrote the story of his "America," expressing what ht it about. In 1831, William C. bridge, of New York, a noted educa- was deputed to visit Germany and it the system of the public schools. nd that in the German schools much on was given to music. Having f no knowledge of the German lan- he brought them to Dr. Smith, And- hen he was then studying theol- questing him to furnish translations German words, or to write new and songs adapted to the German

"February, 1832," writes Dr. Smith, ng over one of these books, my at- was drawn to a tune which at- me by the simple and natural ment and its fitness for children's Glancing at the German words at t of the page I saw that they were ic, and I was instantly inspired to patriotic hymn of my own. Seiz- scrap of waste paper, I began to and in half an hour I think the stood upon it substantially as they g to-day. I did not propose to write nal hymn. I laid the song aside, early forgot that I had made it. eeks later I sent it to Mr. Mason, and following Fourth of July, much to prise, he brought it out at a chil- celebration in the Park Street , in Boston, where it was sung in or the first time."

then, "America" has been sung in every land under the sun, wherever the patriotic sons and daughters of Columbia gather, and it has added more to the fame of the author than all his other compositions.

Steadfast Chinese Converts.

While foreign missionaries in China have the protection of the flag of their respective governments, the native Christians, having no such protection, are exposed to bitterest persecutions from their countrymen, with no human authority to appeal to. Hence, the greatest sufferers in connection with the anti-foreign riots have been among those natives who accepted the Christian faith and were known as friends of the missionaries. Yet, so far as we have heard, these native Christians have stood the test admirably. A letter from Dr. Griffith John in the English Independent refers to the fidelity of the native Christians in Sz'chuen. Dr. John, writing from Hankow, says of the native preachers who have passed through that city from Chen-tu: "On the one hand they have brought much sadness to my mind, but they have brought much joy also. Their patience, their courage, their love, their zeal, their determination to return to their work—all these things have impressed my mind deeply. Then the stories they have to tell of their converts are very inspiring. Almost to a man the converts behaved splendidly in the midst of all their trials.

"As the missionaries were leaving, the converts assured them that they would cling to Christ and their profession of his name. 'We will meet as before,' they said, 'and read our Bibles and pray. We do not promise to sing, for that might involve us in trouble; but we will not forsake the assembling of ourselves together.'"

HOW SHE HELPED ARMENIA.

A touching instance of practical sympathy comes from Brooklyn. Mrs. H., having no money of her own to donate, but being very anxious to help the suffering Armenians, went among her friends and collected $5.30.

West Indian Folk-Lore.

WEST INDIAN Folk-lore contains many instances of the influence of Obeah upon the negroes. It has also a collection of fairy tales and silly stories with which the people amused each other, from which I extract an example: "In the West Indies, if you desire to be told a fairy tale or anything of the kind, you must ask for 'Anansi' stories. In the old days these were usually told at local gatherings of the people, such as weddings or funerals, the latter being equal occasions for festivity with the former. The old women keep the children quiet with these tales, and the small, white 'buccra,' sitting by its nurse, will have a flood of folk-lore wasted on its entertainment, which an elder interested in the same will vainly endeavor to hear, the narrator repeating: 'Dat foolishness; wonder missus car to har dat.' Anansi stories, which are those usually told to children, owe their name to a mysterious personage who plays the principal part in them—a hairy, old man, with long nails, very ugly, called Brother or Father Anansi. In some way Anansi bears a resemblance to the Scandinavian 'Troll' or 'Scrattle,' and the 'Lubber fiend' of the English north country; and his character is not unlike that of the German 'Reinecke Fuchs,' or the Japanese 'Kitsuri Fox,' thievish and cunning. Here is one of the Anansi stories: Anansi and Baboon were disputing one day which was fattest; Anansi said he was sure he was fat, but Baboon declared he was fatter. Then Anansi proposed they should prove it; so they made a fire and agreed that they should hang up before it and see which would drop most fat. Baboon hung up Anansi first, but no fat dropped. Then Anansi hung up Baboon, and very soon the fat began to drop, which smelt so good that Anansi cut a slice of Baboon and said: 'O brother Baboon, you fat for true.' But Baboon didn't speak. So Anansi said: 'Well, speak or not speak, I'll eat you every bit to-day,' which he really did. But when he had eaten up all Baboon, the bits joined together in his stomach, and began to pull him about so much that he was obliged to go to a doctor. The doctor told him not to eat anything for some days, then he was to get a ripe banana and hold it to his mouth. When Baboon, who would be hungry, smelt the banana, he would be sure to run up to eat it, and so he would run out of his mouth. So Anansi starved himself and got the banana, and did as the doctor told him, but when he put the banana to his mouth he was so hungry he couldn't help eating it. So he didn't get rid of Baboon, which went on pulling him, until he went back to the doctor, who took a banana and held it to Anansi's mouth, and very soon the baboon jumped up to catch it, and ran out of his mouth, and Anansi was glad to get rid of him. And baboons to this very day like bananas. Besides Anansi stories there are also Duppy or Jumbee stories which relate solely to ghosts, and resemble what the French call 'revenants,' the Germans 'wald gheist,' and are also similar to the Irish 'fetch.'"

In Martinique prevails a curious superstition, that of the 'diablesse,' a beautiful negress, with piercing eyes, who passes silently through some lonely cane-piece where men and women are at work, and whatever man she smiles upon must arise sooner or later and follow her—to death, since he is never seen again. This superstition is apparently akin to that prevailing among the Russian peasants, of the Baba Yagas, or witch woman, whose look wiles a man away to death.

People who are out of doors very early in the morning in tropical latitudes, often feel in the midst of the cool freshness, sudden breaths of hot air—a curious phenomenon. This gives rise to another superstition, and the negroes say they are passing by "Jumbee's fire-place," where he made his fire over-night. The beautiful silk cotton tree is supposed to be Jumbee's favorite haunt, and a negro is loth to cut down one of these trees, certain that some evil will overtake him after so doing. For this a lover of nature is inclined to bless Jumbee, as the means of saving many of those kings of the forest.

Christmas in History.

THE custom of commemorating the birthday of Christ is said to date back to the early part of the fourth century. In Godfrey's Magazine, Nora Archibald Smith gives this interesting sketch of the history past and present of Christmas: St. Chrysostom makes mention of the day in one of his sermons as early as 386 A.D. It had in those days, of course, none of its modern accompaniments of Christmas trees, Christmas stockings and Christmas gifts; but was merely a religious ceremonial, interwoven with many purely Pagan observances. It early took deep root in Germany, where its poetic and mystical elements touched an answering chord in the hearts of the people. Before the German nation became Christianized, a solemn festival called, like that of the Romans, the "Twelve Nights," extending from December 25th to January 6th, had been yearly observed. It was intended to celebrate the turning-point in the conflict of natural forces; the ice-king was at the pinnacle of victory, but the sun-god had wheeled his fiery steeds and was about to bring to the world the warmth and buds of spring. Thus the early German Christmas grew to be a curious mixture of Pagan and Christian observances.

The cuttom of binding the trees of the orchard with ropes of straw on Christmas-eve, and shaking the crumbs from the table-cloths about their roots, that they might become more fruitful, point to the mysterious influence attributed to the "Twelve Nights." In the Tyrol, the fruit-trees are soundly beaten for a similar reason; In Bohemia, the limbs are shaken during the performance of midnight mass, while in other localities the orchard is presented with fhe remains of the Christmas supper, to which it has previously been invited. In certain provinces of Austria, it is still customary to perform a Christmas play, just before the holidays.

St. Nicholas, Bishop of Myra in the time of Constantine, is, for the children at least, the most popular saint in the calendar everywhere. Familiar legends state that he earned his reputation for generosity in early Roman times by secretly leaving marriage portion at the windows of three destitute maidens. In some countries he is supposed to make his annual rounds riding on a white horse or ass with a basket on his arm. Sometimes he carries a bunch of rods and announces his arrival by the ringing of a bell, in which case the children are summoned and go through an ordeal of questions in regard to their good behavior. In Belgium, St. Nicholas makes his serial visitations at dead of night and silently. In France, the Christchild comes at night unseen, with a retinue of angels, to fill the shoes and stockings with Christmas gifts. In some parts of Austria the lovely Christ-child and grim Rupert, carrying a bell, make an early visit, and leave together. When the tinkling of Rupert's bell has ceased, and he is well out of sight, the children hastily take off their shoes, tie them together and run into the garden to lay them under a bush. Then they cuddle together round the fire, telling stories of bright Christmases past and those to come, till the clock strikes ten. As the last stroke dies away, they fly into the garden to find the shoes running over with apples, nuts, and candies.

There are many superstitions about Christmas-eve, all deep-rooted in some beautiful truth, which are still firmly held in various countries. The belief that cattle kneel at midnight in recognition of the anniversary of Christ's birth, is said to be prevalent yet in remote parts of England, and in modern Mexico they tell you that in the "Good Night" the cocks crow, "Cristo nacio," (Christ is born.) In some portions of Germany the table remains spread and the lights burning throughout the night. Throughout Scandinavia, the Yuletide, which begins on Christmas, is the merriest time of the year; watch-dogs are unchained, the cattle receive an extra allowance of fodder and every morning the wild birds are fed with generous handfuls of seed. The table is laid and left standing throughout the day, and each visitor must partake of something or he is believed to carry away the yule-joy. Old quarrels are forgotten, old feuds adjusted, the courts are closed, and on Christmas-eve the shoes of the entire household, great and small, are set close together in a row, that their owners may live in peace and harmony throughout the year. In Sweden and Denmark the Christmas gifts are distributed in numberless curious ways. Sometimes they are thrown into the room by a mysterious messenger who knocks loudly and then disappears. Strange visitors arrive throughout the evening, all disguised in one fashion or another, hobbling on crutches, wrapped in fur, with covered faces or masked in some ingenious way. Knocks sound first an one door, then at another, boxes fly in at the windows; everything is hurry and mystery and the children are in ecstasies.

The Christmas-tree is undoubtedly of German origin, and was formerly used only by distinctly Protestant families and churches. In its present form it is of comparatively recent date, but its Pagan forerunner enjoys great antiquity. To the Russians, St. Nicholas is especially dear, and Christmas-trees are universal. In early England, the holiday merriment seems to have been especially widespread. It was not a children's festival—the introduction of the Christmas-tree there is of comparatively recent date—nor can we find any mention in early times of Christmas stockings or other childish delights. It was, however, a season of general rejoicing and merriment. The boar's head always appeared at the banquet with great pomp. It was carried in by the strongest of the guardsmen singing a Christmas carol, and preceded by a forester, a huntsman and a couple of pages carrying the mustard.

The Yule-log, cut from the forest the year before and lighted with a brand from the last year's burning, was regarded as an emblem of hospitality. Its entrance was accompanied by the singing of the carol:

Come bring with a noise
My merry, merry boys,
The Christmas log to the firing.

Christmas carols were sung everywhere, and indeed this is continued in modern times, while the boar's head is still served at the royal dinner.

Our Christmas in America is still young, but has clothed itself about with many observances borrowed from older countries. Our Christmas-tree comes from Germany, our Christmas-stocking from France, our well-beloved Santa Claus from Holland, but the holy joy and sweet observance and tender reverence of the season come from above.

TIME AND ETERNITY.

I LOVE to watch the coming day
With rapturous delight,
Scattering mists of fogs away,
And gloom of passing night.

I love to watch the sun arise
Radiant with golden glow,
Traverse its pathway through the skies,
And warm the earth below.

I love in loneliness to feel
My Saviour's presence near,
Lowly at his footstool kneel,
Pleading his loving care.

I love to watch and wait to hear
The summons from on high,
With guardian angels ever near,
And Jesus always nigh.

I love to think of dear ones there,
While saints around the throne
Shout glad hosannas everywhere,
And praise the Holy One.

—MRS. J. M. PRENTISS.

Another Florence Nightingale.

A Chinese naval officer, captured by the Japanese, has recently given to a newspaper correspondent high testimony to the gentle, unostentatious labor among the Chinese prisoners in Japan, of an American missionary, Miss Talcott. She had a mysterious happiness whose fountain they could not understand; and her sunny face, aglow with an inward delight, soothed and blessed the sorrowful and broken-hearted.

The conservatism of these men was proverbial, yet the most stubborn hearts yielded to Miss Talcott's simple-hearted love. Though reluctant to acknowledge the superiority of anything foreign, their prejudice was disarmed and their wrong impressions dispelled. They had heard that Christianity was a perverse doctrine; but so deep an impression did Miss Talcott make by her tender ministrations, that they acknowledged its high and noble objects, and said they would never again speak a derogatory word.

Not Wasted Lives.

Some remarkable utterances have been made by the kindred of the missionaries who were massacred in August last at Ku-cheng, in China. The father of the Miss Marshall who was among the slain, is vicar of a church at Blackheath, England, and on the Sunday after the news of his daughter's death arrived, he preached a memorial discourse. He chose as his text the words: "Not unto death, but for the glory of God." In the course of his sermon, he said: "I believe that I shall see that mighty stubborn fortress of Satan—called the Empire of China—handed over to the Captain of our Salvation, and on that day, whether it be here or in Paradise, I know I shall rejoice that one who called me father, was a member of that forlorn hope. I believe that I shall see the 'Divine Enterprise' of bringing millions of souls into the treasure-house of God completely accomplished; and I know that I shall rejoice in that day, when 'these from the land of Sinim' acknowledge that the martyrdoms of Ku-cheng were a factor in the deliverance of their country from its aged-bound heathenism. 'Wasted lives!' Yes, there are many, many wasted lives—alas for the human race! but you must seek for them elsewhere than in the ranks of 'the noble army of martyrs.'"

"Do not Stammer."

Edwin S. Johnston, one of Phila.'s Specialists, succeeded in curing himself of this dreadful affliction, and has probably made more wonderful cures than any living practitioner. His system is endorsed by Hon. John Wanamaker, Ex-Postmaster-Gen., U. S., who in reply to a recent letter to an inquirer wrote: "Mr. Edwin S. Johnston, has been very successful in curing stammering, and to any one who is suffering with that affliction, I would recommend a trial of his system."

Prof. Horatio C. Wood, M.D., LL.D., University of Pa., says: "I believe Mr. E. S. Johnston to be honest and capable, and have seen some striking results of his work."

Bishop Cyrus D. Foss, Phila. Pa., in a testimonial letter says: "It gives me pleasure to certify to my high confidence of Mr. E. S. Johnston's method of treatment of stammering."

Consumption

"What I have seen of God's healing power through you demands of me that I speak for the good of others"

If you value your Life

Or the Lives of those nearest and dearest to you,

Read!

DEAR MR. CONGREVE:—As a rule I have no faith in advertised remedies; but it must now be some twenty-five years since I saw in the person of one of my students the effects of your Balsamic Elixir. He seemed at death's door, but he lives now, a strong, hearty man. Since then I have seen in many, very many instances, the most happy results following your medicine. I do not go by hearsay, but I testify to what I have seen with my own eyes. I believe that you have saved numbers from Consumption. I have friends with coughs and weak lungs, who speak of your medicine with sincere gratitude. Personally I find it most useful in the case of wearing cough. Very reluctantly do I give testimonials for publication; but I send you this as your due. What I have seen of God's healing power through you, demands of me that I speak for the good of others. I have those around me whose health I value, and they are living witnesses that yours is a very beneficial preparation. Yours heartily,

Spurgeon.

"Westwood," Beulah Hill, England.

Every person suffering from Chest Disease, and all of weak lungs and delicate habit, should read my book on Consumption of the Lungs and Decline, and its successful treatment, showing that formidable disease to be curable in all its stages, with observations on Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Chronic Bronchitis; together with accounts of nearly 400 successfully cured cases, any one of which may be like yours, to be had post free for 25 cts., or the book will be sent free with every first order for $1.00 bottle of Congreve's Balsamic Elixir.

The above letter from the late eminent preacher, C. H. Spurgeon, is one of thousands of testimonials to the wonderful curative properties of my BALSAMIC ELIXIR, which not only cures consumption, but gives instant and permanent relief in cases of Asthma, Chronic Bronchitis, La Grippe and all Chest affections.

It acts like a charm in ordinary cases of Cough, Sore Throat, Whooping Cough, Chills, &c., and should be kept in every home.

DAINTY AND CAPTIVATING Christmas Gift

We want you to have a set. Everyone who has thus far bought them are delighted. Hundreds who never before did such a thing have shown these exquisite souvenirs to friends and neighbors and have secured most beautiful and valuable silverware premiums for the little we required. The spoons are real works of art; little gems of the mighty World's Fair and unless you have seen them you cannot realize what a delightful present they make for wedding, birthday or Christmas gift. The price is only 99 cents for six spoons, that anyone can afford to buy them. Why not buy a set today. You will be deeply interested in the premium offers we will send you and whether you care to show the spoons or not you will be glad you bought them. This is the kind of letters we receive daily:

DECATUR, Ills., September 25, 1895.

Leonard Mfg. Co.—Please forward fifty-four sets of World's Fair Souvenir Spoons. Enclosed find Chicago draft for the amount. I have many orders and wish to deliver as soon as possible. MISS A. A. GAMBLE, 461 N. Church Street.

WASHINGTON, D. C. Sept. 14, 1895.

To the Leonard Mfg. Co.: I sent an order like the enclosed for some Souvenir Spoons last year for a wedding present to a grand daughter and they were the most pleasing of all her silverware (which was abundant) as a souvenir of the Fair. MRS. SIDNEY ALLEN, Howard University.

LAPORTE, Pa., Sept. 14, 95

Leonard Mfg., Co. Chicago. Gentlemen:—Enclosed find check for $23.76 for thirty-six sets of Souvenir Spoons. Very truly, E. S. LATSHAW, Pastor M. E. Church.

I received the spoons in good condition and find them all I could desire. Enclosed find Money order for $5.94 for six more sets, with which you will also send the spoons as premium. Respectfully yours, MRS. L. C. SANBORN, 1609 Pierce Street, Sioux City, Iowa.

Description of Souvenir Spoons.

They are standard after-dinner coffee size, heavily coin silver plated, with gold plated bowls, each spoon has a different World's Fair building exquisitely engraved in the bowl, and the handle is finely chased showing a raised head of Christopher Columbus with the dates 1492-1893, and the World's Fair Cen. These set is packed in an elegant plush lined case. The entire set is sent prepaid for 99 cents, and if not as represented your money will be refunded.

Send 99 cents by Postoffice or Express Money Order. Individual checks and C. O. D. orders not accepted. We refer to First National Bank of Chicago or any Express or Mercantile Company, and any leading Religious Paper in the Country. Be sure to order at once as this is a Christmas Offer.

A Kingly Worshipper.

When George IV. of England was visiting Ireland, he told Lord Roden that on a particular morning he was coming to breakfast with him. He accordingly came; and, bringing with him two or three of the nobility, happened to arrive just as his lordship and family had assembled for domestic worship. Lord Roden, being told that his guest had arrived, went to the door and met him, with every expression of respect, and seated him and the gentlemen who accompanied him, in his parlor. He then turned to the King and said, "Your Majesty will not doubt that I feel highly honored by this visit; but there is a duty which I have not yet discharged this morning, which I owe to the King of kings—that of performing domestic worship; and your Majesty will be kind enough to excuse me while I retire with my household and attend to it." "Certainly," replied the King, "but I am going with you;" and immediately arose and followed him into the hall, where the family were assembled, and taking his station in an old arm-chair, remained during the family devotions.

An Asthma Cure at Last.

Medical Science at last reports a positive cure for Asthma in the remarkable Kola Plant, a new botanical discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa. Its cures are really marvelous. Rev. J. L. Combs, of Martinsburg, W. Va., writes that it cured him of Asthma of fifty years standing, and Hon. L. G. Clute, of Greeley, Iowa, testifies that for three years he had to sleep propped up in a chair, being unable to lie down night or day from Asthma. The Kola Plant cured him at once. To make the matter sure, these and hundreds of other cures are sworn to under oath before a notary public. So great is their faith in its wonderful curative powers, the Kola Importing Co., 1164 Broadway, New York, is sending out large trial cases of the Kola compound free to all sufferers from Asthma. Send them your name and address on a postal card, and they will send you a large trial case by mail free. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

BY INHALATION ONLY, THE

of Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis, Laryngitis, Hay Fever, and Whooping Cough.

TRADE BOOTH'S HYOMEI "DRI-AYR" MARK

Hyomei is a purely vegetable antiseptic, and destroys the germs and microbes which cause diseases of the respiratory organs.

The air, thoroughly charged with Hyomei, is inhaled through the Pocket Inhaler at the mouth, and, after permeating the minutest air-cells, is slowly exhaled through the nose. It is aromatic, delightful to inhale, inexpensive, and gives immediate relief. It stops all spasmodic coughing instantly, clears the voice, expands the lungs, and increases the breathing capacity.

Pocket Inhaler Outfit, Complete, by Mail, $1.00 (consisting of pocket inhaler, made of deodorized hard rubber, beautifully polished, a bottle of Hyomei, a dropper, and full directions for using). If you are still skeptical, send me your address, and my pamphlet shall prove that Hyomei does cure.

Are you open to conviction? Consultation and trial treatment free at my office.

BALTIMORE, MD., October 7, 1895.

R. T. BOOTH, Esq., New York.

DEAR SIR: I sent you one dollar about ten days ago for one of your pocket inhaler outfits. It came to hand last Friday morning.

Mrs. Honey had been suffering severely for three weeks daily with asthma. As soon as the inhaler came she began using it, and after a few inhalations the asthma ceased, and now (Tuesday) it has not returned. She has had this trouble ever since she was seven years old, and is now forty, and we have spent hundreds of dollars in search of relief, purchasing everything we saw advertised. When you consider all this, I think it is the most remarkable thing that once using the inhaler should remove the trouble entirely.

Very truly yours,
(Rev.) GEORGE W. HONEY.

Roughing It in Alaska.

From a letter which Rev. E. H. Edson sends to the Spirit of Missions we can get some idea of the hardships and privations attending missionary work in Alaska. Mr. Edson is at Point Hope, where Dr. Driggs, who is now taking a brief vacation, has so long been laboring. Mr. Edson says: "The effects of the isolation of this field upon the mind, and, by reflex action, upon the body, are terrible. To do one's own housework, cook one's own meals, wash dishes, sweep, cut firewood for living-rooms and school, teach a school of forty or more natives without a common language, to be on a restricted allowance of drinking water, to obtain which meagre supply a journey in summer of one and one-half miles and in winter of sixteen miles must be made, and coupled with all this, for ten months of the year to face the rigors of an Arctic winter—this is a severe test of any man.

"With regard to myself, I am glad to be able to say that, excepting persistent rheumatism in my left arm and shoulder, I am well, and have been from the first. During the doctor's absence I carried on the school alone for two months as best I could, conducted divine service, and preached to the natives in their own language. I look forward with joy to a busy summer in moving and settling the mission in a new loation."

Good News—Wonderful Cures of Catarrh and Consumption.

Our readers who suffer from Lung Diseases, Catarrh, Bronchitis and Consumption will be glad to hear of the wonderful cures made by the new treatment known in Europe as the Austral-Broca Discovery. Write to the New Medical Advance, 67 Eastern Street, Cincinnati, Ohio and they will send you this new treatment free for trial. State age and all particulars of your disease.

It is a mistake to try to cure catarrh by using local applications. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts through the blood.

The Ladies' World is a mammoth Illustrated magazine, each issue comprising 20 or more large pages, including a handsome cover, printed in colors, and is devoted to stories, poems, ladies' fancy work, artistic needlework, home decoration, housekeeping, fashions, hygiene, juvenile reading, etiquette, etc., etc. It is one of the best and most popular of ladies' magazines, having a circulation of over 350,000. Its publishers, wishing to introduce it into thousands not already taken, now make the following unparalleled offer. Upon receipt of only 18 Cents in postage stamps, we will send The Ladies' World for Three Months, and to every subscriber we will send Free our new 1896 "Perfection" Stamping Outfit, containing a great variety of new patterns, as follows: 1 Ornamental Script Alphabet, 1 in. high; 1 Border of Wild Roses, tied with ribbon, 2x12 in.; 1 set of 4 designs for Doilies, 4x4 in. each; 1 Spray of Forget-me-nots, 3x5 in.; 1 Floral Design, 4x6 in.; 1 Centre Piece for Doily, 12 in. square; 1 Centre and Corner Pattern for Doily, 5x5 in.; 1 Spray of Roses, 4x6 in.; 1 Bunch of Cherries, 4x4 in.; 1 Scallop for Edge of Towel, 1 Elegant Lily Pattern, 7x9 in., 1 Border for Piano Cover; 1 Basket of Violets, 6x6 in.; 1 Louis XV. Design; 1 Large Spray of Daisies, 7x12 in.; 1 Knife and Fork for Carving Set, 5x7 in.; 1 Pretty Design for Silk Fan, just cut, 13x13 in.; 1 Centre for Tidies, Lace Work; 1 set of 4 Hydrangeas, for Corners of Towels, Lace Work, and 1 other beautiful designs, making in all over fifty patterns besides the alphabet, perforated on the best quality of Bond or Parchment Paper, which can be used over and over again. With each Outfit we send free one Dissolving Pencil, by means of which the new French stamping process can be used, and complete instructions for stamping. The patterns contained in this Outfit would cost over $2 if purchased singly, but we send the whole free to anyone sending us 18 cents for a 3 months' subscription to our magazine. Or we will send the Outfit and 5 cents—23 cents in all—for 72 cents. Do not miss this opportunity. Satisfaction guaranteed.

SPECIAL OFFER! Upon receipt of Fifty Cents we will send The Ladies' World for 14 Months, beginning Nov., 1895, and the entire year of 1896, and the Stamping Outfit free. Address:

The Reason Why.

Why is it that Compound Oxygen cures so many cases of disease which physicians have pronounced incurable? Oxygen is admitted to be a germicide. Ozone is a revitalizer. Many diseases have been shown to result from the presence of bacteria or germs. Compound Oxygen is rich in ozone, and is, therefore, a revitalizer and a powerful one as well as anti-septic, and this accounts for the wonderful success which it has achieved within the past twenty-five years. This success is an established fact, substantiated by the willing testimony of grateful patients. For further information, call and see Drs. Starkey & Palen at their Office, or write for book of 200 pages sent free.

Your Last Chance!!

Positively Limited to December 24

...The... Encyclopaedic Dictionary is the Court of Last Resort on all questions of dispute

Never again will there be another Special Offer made on this great standard dictionary and encyclopedia of the world's knowledge. We fully intended to advance the price on October 31, but thousands of people in all walks of life have requested an extension of time until Christmas. After careful consideration, we have decided to continue our special offer until the above date. This is done simply and only as a means of advertising this wonderful storehouse of information. We do not expect to make money by this offer, as the very low price on extremely liberal terms little more than pays for paper, printing, and binding; but the tremendous amount of talk created will help to advertise this most modern and up-to-date home reference library. No advertisement can do the work justice; it is its own most eloquent advocate. Recently adopted by the schools of St. Louis, Mo., and many other cities, in preference to all other dictionaries and encyclopedias. It is equal to a college education.

Your pastor, teacher, friend, parents, or your children, will appreciate this great work beyond expression. It will last a lifetime, and always give satisfaction. No business or professional man, teacher, student, mechanic, housewife, or any other person who wishes to keep abreast of the times, or who is interested in the laudable enterprise of self-education, can afford to allow this rare opportunity to pass without careful investigation. Understand, this great work embodies all the features of a complete dictionary and a thorough encyclopedia. The new and entirely up-to-the-times

For a Christmas Gift

Nothing is more desirable. Your pastor, Sunday-school superintendent, teacher, parent, or friend, will appreciate the work beyond expression

Encyclopædic Dictionary

The above is an exact reproduction of THE ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY. Four massive volumes. Weight about 40 pounds.

is now offered all readers of this paper at the rate of 7 Cents per day, in monthly payments of $2 each, until the sum of $16 is paid. This is but little more than one-third the regular price.

This greatest of all dictionaries and encyclopedias was edited by such world-renowned scholars as assisted by scores of other specialists in various branches of knowledge.

Don't forget this special offer holds good only until Christmas Eve, at which time the price will be advanced to $42 to $70 per set, and absolutely no deviation from these prices will be made. It is not for sale in book-stores, and can only be obtained from us or our authorized representatives.

Over $750,000 Required to Produce this Magnificent Self-Educator.

It is a Complete Dictionary of the English language. Every word is exhaustively treated as to its origin, history, development, etymology, pronunciation and various meanings.

It is a Thorough Encyclopedia of anatomy, botany, chemistry, zoology, geology, art, music, agriculture, physics, philosophy, mechanics, history, mythology, biblical knowledge, etc.

It is a Superb Library Book, substantially bound, printed from new plates, in large, clear type, on heavy white paper, and illustrated with thousands of new pictures made especially for this work.

It is better than all other dictionaries, because the latest edition of Worcester contains but 116,000 words and 2,126 pages; the latest Webster contains but 140,000 words and 2,011 pages; the Standard contains but a little over 200,000 words and 2,318 pages; and even The Century contains but 225,000 words, and sells for $60 to $100. Encyclopedias of various kinds sell for $50 to $200. This great ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY, containing 5,357 pages, over 3,000 illustrations, bound in four handsome volumes, has over 250,000 words, 50,000 encyclopedic subjects, and is the accepted authority of the English language.

Nine Opinions—Thousands More Equally Good.

The Encyclopædic Dictionaries ordered for use in the public schools are giving excellent satisfaction. After an exhaustive examination of all the leading dictionaries, yours was selected in preference to any other. As an unabridged dictionary, your work leaves nothing to be desired: and the profusion of encyclopedic matter, terse, yet comprehensive, covering thousands of important topics saves many a long search through the more cumbersome encyclopedias.—Elmer E. Lacey, Chairman Committee of Study Com., St. Louis Board of Education.

I have Webster, Worcester, and the Century, and for encyclopedias I have the Britannica and Appleton's. The Encyclopædic Dictionary is a magnificent substitute for all of them.—J. H. Atwood, Esq., Attorney-at-Law, Leavenworth, Kan.

Serves the purpose of a complete reference library.—Christian Herald, New York.

It is the greatest time-saver among all my books of reference. There is no other work of many times its size and cost that can for a moment compare with it.—Rev. S. W. Miller, D.D., Saltsburg, Pa.

In all respects a work that every student and home should possess.—Gov. Geo. T. Werts, of N. J.

The Encyclopædic Dictionary opens the dictionary war which may involve the Century, the Standard and the International.—New York World.

It forms a perfect treasury of knowledge, and serves the purposes of an encyclopedia as well as a dictionary. Send five more sets.—Rev. George Patterson, D.D., New Glasgow, Nova Scotia.

A marvel of condensation—a boon to every student.—Rev. Oliver Crane, D.D., LL.D., Boston.

Extensive in information, unimpeachable in accuracy.—Public Ledger, Philadelphia.

Books guaranteed as represented, or money refunded if returned within ten days.

HOW TO GET THIS GREAT WORK.—Send $2 by post-office order, express order, or check, and the entire four handsome volumes will be forwarded. Every month thereafter send $2, in the same manner, until the sum of $16 is paid. Understand, the whole set of 4 volumes is sent when the first $2 is paid; thus you have the use of them while paying the balance at the rate of 7 cents per day. All freight or express charges must be paid by purchaser. Any one wishing to pay cash for the complete set, may deduct 10 per cent. and send $14.40. This allowance is practically the cost of keeping the account if purchased on easy terms. We refer to any commercial agency, or any bank in Philadelphia. (Mention this paper.)

HAIR ON THE FACE, NECK, ARMS OR ANY PART OF THE PERSON

QUICKLY DISSOLVED AND REMOVED WITH THE NEW SOLUTION

MODENE

AND THE GROWTH FOREVER DESTROYED WITHOUT THE SLIGHTEST INJURY OR DISCOLORATION OF THE MOST DELICATE SKIN.

Discovered by Accident.—In Compounding, an incomplete mixture was accidentally spilled on the back of the hand, and on washing afterward it was discovered that the hair was completely removed. We purchased the new discovery and named it MODENE. It is perfectly pure, free from all injurious substances, and so simple any one can use it. It acts mildly but surely, and you will be surprised and delighted with the results. Apply for a few minutes and the hair disappears as if by magic. It has no resemblance whatever to any other preparation ever used for a like purpose, and to scientific discovery ever attained such wonderful results. IT CAN NOT FAIL. If the growth be light, one application will remove it permanently; the heavy growth such as the beard or hair on moles may require two or more applications before all the roots are destroyed, although all hair will be removed at each application, and without slightest injury or unpleasant feeling when applied or ever afterward. MODENE SUPERSEDES ELECTROLYSIS.

Recommended by all who have tested its merits—Used by people of refinement.

Gentlemen who do not appreciate nature's gift of a beard, will find a priceless boon in Modene which does away with shaving. It dissolves and destroys the life principle of the hair, thereby rendering its future growth an utter impossibility, and is guaranteed to be as harmless as water to the skin. Young persons who find an embarrassing growth of hair coming, should use Modene to destroy its growth. Modene sent by mail in safety mailing cases, postage paid, (securely sealed from observation) on receipt of price, $1.00 per bottle. Send money by letter, with your full address written plainly. Correspondence sacredly private. Postage stamps received the same as cash. (ALWAYS MENTION YOUR COUNTY AND THIS PAPER.) Cut this advertisement out.

This Is It!

This is COTTOLENE — that is fast banishing lard from the kitchens of the world. This is the new shortening that house-keepers say is so much more economical and delicious than lard. This is the product that physicians say is destined to make dyspepsia a disease of the past. It's the greatest step of modern science toward pure food, better cooking, perfect health. Judge for yourself, whether it's time you let lard go the way of the candle and the spinning-wheel. COTTOLENE is sold everywhere in one, three and five pound tins. Beware of imitations. SMALL TROUBLES.

A Sermon Preached by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., at Washington, D. C., on the Text: Deut. 7 : 20, "The Lord thy God will send the hornet."

IT seems as if the insectile world were determined to extirpate the human race. It bombards the grain fields and the orchards and the vineyards. The Colorado beetle, the Nebraska grasshopper, the New Jersey locust, the universal potato-bug, seem to carry on the work which was begun ages ago when the insects buzzed out of Noah's Ark as the door was opened.

In my text, the hornet flies out on its mission. It is a species of wasp, swift in its motion and violent in its sting. Its touch is torture to man or beast. We have all seen the cattle run bellowing under the cut of its lancet. In boyhood we used to stand cautiously looking at the globular nest hung from the tree branch, and while we were looking at the wonderful covering we were struck with something that sent us shrieking away. The hornet goes in swarms. It has captains over hundreds, and twenty of them alighting on one man will produce death.

The Persians attempted to conquer a Christian city, but the elephants and the beasts on which the Persians rode were assaulted by the hornet, so that the whole army was broken up, and the besieged city was rescued. This burning and noxious insect stung out the Hittites and the Canaanites from their country. What gleaming sword and chariot of war could not accomplish was done by the puncture of an insect. The Lord sent the hornet.

My friends, when we are assaulted by great behemoths of trouble, we become chivalric, and we assault them; we get on the high-mettled steed of our courage, and we make a cavalry charge at them. and, if God be with us, we come out stronger and better than when we went in. But, alas, for these insectile annoyances of life — these foes too small to shoot—these things without any avoirdupois weight — the gnats and the midges and the flies and the wasps and the hornets! In other words, it is the small stinging annoyances of our life which drive us out and use us up. In the best-conditioned life, for some grand and glorious purpose God has sent the hornet.

I remark, in the first place, that these small stinging annoyances may come in the shape of a nervous organization. People who are prostrated under typhoid fevers or with broken bones get plenty of sympathy: but who pities anybody that is nervous? The doctors say, and the family say, and everybody says, "Oh, she's only a little nervous; that's all!" The sound of a heavy foot, the harsh clearing of a throat, a discord in music, a want of harmony between the shawl and the glove on the same person, a curt answer, a passing slight, the wind from the east, any one of ten thousand annoyances opens the door for the hornet. The fact is that the vast majority of the people in this country are overworked, and their nerves are the first to give out. A great multitude are under the strain of Leyden, who, when he was told by his physician that [illegible] was in such poor physical health he would die, responded, "Doctor, whether I live or [illegible]"

These sensitive persons of whom I speak have a bleeding sensitiveness. The flies love to light on anything raw, and these people are like the Canaanites spoken of in the text or in the context—they have a very thin covering, and are vulnerable at all points. "And the Lord sent the hornet."

Again, the small insect annoyances may come to us in the shape of friends and acquaintances who are always saying disagreeable things. There are some people you cannot be with for half an hour but you feel cheered and comforted. Then there are other people you cannot be with for five minutes before you feel miserable. They do not mean to disturb you, but they sting you to the bone. They gather up all the yarn which the gossips spin, and retail it. They gather up all the adverse criticisms about your person, about your business, about your home. about your church, and they make your ear the funnel into which they pour it. They laugh heartily when they tell you, as though it were a good joke, and you laugh too—outside.

These people are brought to our attention in the Bible, in the Book of Ruth. Naomi went forth beautiful and with the finest of worldly prospects, and into another land; but, after awhile, she came back widowed and sick and poor. What did her friends do when she came to the city? They all went out, and, instead of giving her common-sense consolation, what did they do? Read the Book of Ruth and find out. They threw up their hands and said, "Is this Naomi?" as much as to say, "How awful bad you do look!" When I entered the ministry I looked very pale for years,and every year, for four or five years, a hundred times a year, I was asked if I had not the consumption; and, passing through the room I would sometimes hear people sigh and say, "A-ah! not long for this world!" I resolved in those times that I never, in any conversation, would say anything depressing, and by the help of God I have kept the resolution. These people of whom I speak reap and bind in the great harvest-field of discouragement. Some day you greet them with an hilarious "good-morning," and they come buzzing at you with some depressing information. "The Lord sent the hornet."

When I see so many people in the world who like to say disagreeable things, and write disagreeable things, I come almost in my weaker moments to believe what a man said to me in Philadelphia one Monday morning. I went to get the horse at the livery stable, and the hostler, a plain man, said to me. "Mr. Talmage, I saw that you preached to the young men yesterday." I said, "Yes." He said, "No use, no use; man's a failure."

The small insect annoyances of life sometimes come in the shape of local physical trouble, which does not amount to a positive prostration, but which bothers you when you want to feel the best. Perhaps it is a sick-headache which has been the plague of your life, and you appoint some occasion of mirth, or sociality, or usefulness, and when the clock strikes the hour you cannot make your appearance. Perhaps the trouble is between the ear and the forehead, in the shape of a neuralgic twinge. Nobody can see it or sympathize with it; but just at the time when you want your intellect clearest, and your disposition brightest, you feel a sharp, keen, disconcerting thrust. "The Lord sent the hornet."

Perhaps these small insect annoyances will come in the shape of a domestic irritation. The parlor and the kitchen do not always harmonize. To get good service, and to keep it, is one of the greatest questions of the country. Sometimes it may be the arrogancy and inconsiderateness of employers, but, whatever be the fact, we all admit there are these insect annoyances winging their way out from the culinary department. If the grace of God be not in the heart of the housekeeper, she cannot maintain her equilibrium. The men come home at night and hear the story of these annoyances, and say, "Oh, these home troubles are very little things!" They are small, small as wasps, but they sting. Martha's nerves were all unstrung when she rushed in, asking Christ to scold Mary, and there are tens of thousands of women who are dying, stung to death by these pestiferous domestic annoyances. "The Lord sent the hornet."

These small insect disturbances may also come in the shape of business irritations. There are men here who went through 1857 and the 24th of September, 1869, without losing their balance, who are every day unhorsed by little annoyances—a clerk's ill manners, or a blot of ink on a bill of lading, or the extravagance of a partner who overdraws his account, or the underselling by a business rival, or the whispering of store-confidences in the street, or the making of some little bad debt which was against your judgment, just to please somebody else.

It is not the panics that kill the merchants. Panics come only once in ten or twenty years. It is the constant din of these every-day annoyances which is sending so many of our best merchants into nervous dyspepsia and paralysis and the grave. When our national commerce fell flat on its face, these men stood up and felt almost defiant; but their life is going away now under the swarm of these pestiferous annoyances. "The Lord sent the hornet."

I have noticed in the history of some that their annoyances are multiplying, and that they have a hundred where they used to have ten. The naturalist tells us that a wasp sometimes has a family of twenty thousand wasps, and it does seem as if every annoyance of your life brooded a million. By the help of God I want to show you the other side. The hornet is of no use? Oh, yes! The naturalists tell us they are very important in the world's economy; they kill spiders, and they clear the atmosphere; and I really believe God sends the annoyances of our life upon us to kill the spiders of the soul, and to clear the atmosphere of our skies.

These annoyances are sent on us, I think, to wake us up from our lethargy. There is nothing that makes a man so lively as a nest of "yellow jackets," and I think that these annoyances are intended to persuade us of the fact that this is not a world for us to stop in. If we had a bed of everything that was attractive and soft and easy, what would we want of heaven? We think that the hollow tree sends the hornet, or we may think that the devil sends the hornet. I want to correct your opinion. "The Lord sent the hornet."

Then I think these annoyances come on us to culture our patience. In the gymnasium, you find upright parallel bars—upright bars, with holes over each other for pegs to be put in. Then the gymnast takes a peg in each hand and he begins to climb, one inch at a time, or two inches, and getting his strength cultured, reaches after awhile the ceiling. And it seems to me that these annoyances in life are a moral gymnasium, each worriment a peg with which we are to climb higher and higher in Christian attainment. We all love to see patience, but it cannot be cultured in fair weather. Patience is a child of the storm. If you had everything desirable, and there was nothing more to get, what would you want with patience? The only time to culture it is when you are lied about, and sick and half dead.

"Oh," you say, "if I only had the circumstances of some well-to-do man I would be patient, too." You might as well say, "If it were not for this water I would swim;" or, "I could shoot this gun if it were not for the charge." When you stand chin-deep in annoyances is the time for you to swim out toward the great headlands of Christian attainment, so as to know Christ and the power of his resurrection, and to have fellowship with his sufferings.

Nothing but the furnace will ever burn out of us the clinker and the slag. I have formed this theory in regard to small annoyances and vexations. It takes just so much trouble to fit us for usefulness and for heaven. The only question is, whether we shall take it in the bulk or pulverized and granulated. Here is one man who takes it in the bulk. His back is broken, or his eyesight put out, or some other awful calamity befalls him; while the vast majority of people take the thing piecemeal. Which way would you rather have it? Of course in piecemeal. Better have five aching teeth than one broken jaw; better ten fly-blisters than an amputation; better twenty squalls than one cyclone. There may be a difference of opinion as to allopathy and homœopathy; but in this matter of trouble I like homœopathic doses—small pellets of annoyance rather than some knock-down dose of calamity. Instead of the thunderbolt give us the hornet. If you have a bank, you would a great deal rather that fifty men would come in with checks less than a hundred dollars than to have two depositors come in the same day each wanting his ten thousand dollars. In this latter case you cough and look down to the floor, and you look up at the ceiling, before you look into the safe. Now, my friends, would you not rather have these small drafts of annoyance on your bank of faith than some all-staggering demand upon your endurance? But remember that little as well as great annoyances equally require you to trust in Christ for succor, and for deliverance from impatience and irritability. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee." In the village of Hamelin, tradition says, there was an invasion of rats, and these small creatures almost devoured the town, and threatened the lives of the population; and the story is that a piper came out one day and played a very sweet tune, and all the vermin followed him—followed him to the banks of the Weser, then he blew a blast and then they dropped in and disappeared forever. Of course this is a fable; but I wish I could, on the sweet flute of the Gospel, draw forth all the nibbling and burrowing annoyances of your life, and play them down into the depths forever.

How many touches did Mr. Church give to his picture of "Cotopaxi" or his "Heart of the Andes?" I suppose about fifty thousand touches. I hear the canvass saying, "Why do you keep me trembling with that pencil so long? Why don't you put it on in one dash?" "No," says Mr. Church, "I know how to make a painting; it will take fifty thousand of these touches." And I want you, my friends, to understand that it is these ten thousand annoyances which under God, are making up the picture of your life, to be hung at last in the galleries of heaven, fit for angels to look at. God knows how to make a picture.

I go into a sculptor's studio and see him shaping a statue. He has a chisel in one hand and a mallet in the other, and he gives a very gentle stroke—click, click, click! I say, "Why dont you strike harder?" "Oh! he replies, "that would shatter the statue. I can't do it that way; I must do it this way." So he works on, and after awhile the features come out, and everybody that enters the studio is charmed and fascinated. Well, God has your soul under process of developmeut, and it is the little annoyances and vexations of life that are chiseling out your immortal nature. It is click, click, click! I wonder why some great providence does not come, and with one stroke prepare you for heaven. Ah, no; God says that is not the way. And so he keeps on by strokes of little vexations, until at last you shall be a glad spectacle for angels and for men.

You know that a large fortune may be spent in small change, and a vast amount of moral character may go away in small depletions. It is the little troubles of life that are having more effect upon you than great ones. A swarm of locusts will kill a grain-field sooner than the incursion of three or four cattle. You say, "Since I lost my child, since I lost my property, I have been a different man." But you do not recognize the architecture of little annoyances, that are hewing, digging, cutting, shaping, splitting, and interjoining your moral qualities. Rats may sink a ship. One lucifer match may send destruction through a block of store-houses. Catherine de Medicis got her death from smelling a poisonous rose. Columbus, by stopping and asking for a piece of bread and a drink of water at a Franciscan convent, was led to the discovery of a new world. And there is an intimate connection between trifles and immensities, between nothings and everythings.

Now, be careful to let none of those annoyances go through your soul unarraigned. Compel them to administer to your spiritual wealth. The scratch of a sixpenny-nail sometimes produces lock-jaw, and the clip of a most infinitesimal annoyance may damage you forever. Do not let any annoyance or perplexity come across your soul without its making you better.

Our Government does not think it belittling to put a tax on small articles. The individual taxes do not amount to much, but in the aggregate to millions and millions of dollars. And I would have you, oh Christian man, put a high tariff on every annoyance and vexation that comes through your soul. This might not amount to much in single cases, but in the aggregate it would be a great revenue of spiritual strength and satisfaction. A bee can suck honey even out of a nettle; and if you have the grace of God in your heart, you can get sweetness out of that which would otherwise irritate and annoy.

A returned missionary told me that a company of adventurers rowing up the Ganges were stung to death by flies that infest that region at certain seasons. I have seen the earth strewed with the carcases of men slain by insect annoyances. The only way to get prepared for the great troubles of life is to conquer these small troubles. What would you say of a soldier who refused to load his gun, or to go into the conflict because it was only a skirmish, saying, "I am not going to expend my ammunition on a skirmish; wait until there comes a general engagement, and then you will see how courageous I am, and what battling I will do?" The general would say to such a man, "If you are not faithful in a skirmish, you would be nothing in a general engagement." And I have to tell you, oh Christian men, if you cannot apply the principles of Christ's religion on a small scale, you will never be able to apply them on a large scale.

If I had my way with you I would have you possess all possible worldly prosperity. I would have you each one a garden—a river flowing through it, geraniums and shrubs on the sides, and the grass and flowers as beautiful as though the rainbow had fallen. I would have you a house, a splendid mansion, and the bed should be covered with upholstery dipped in the setting sun. I would have every hall in your house set with statues and statuettes, and then I would have the four quarters of the globe pour in all their luxuries on your table, and you should have forks of silver and knives of gold, inlaid with diamonds and amethysts. Then you should each one of you have the finest horses, and your pick of the equipages of the world. Then I would have you live a hundred and fifty years, and you should not have a pain or ache until the last breath.

"Not each one of us?" you say. Yes; each one of you. "Not to your enemies?" Yes; the only difference I would make with them would be that I would put a little extra gilt on their walls, and a little extra embroidery on their slippers. But, you say, "Why does not God give us all these things?" Ah! I bethink myself. He is wiser. It would make fools and sluggards of us if we had our way. No man puts his best picture in the portico or vestibule of his house. God meant this world to be only the vestibule of heaven, that great gallery of the universe toward which we are aspiring. We must not have it too good in this world, or we would want no heaven.

Polycarp was condemned to be burned to death. The stake was planted. He was fastened to it. The faggots were placed around him, the fires kindled, but history tells us that the flames bent outward like the canvas of a ship in a stout breeze, so that the flames, instead of destroying Polycarp, were only a wall between him and his enemies. They had actually to destroy him with the poniard; the flames would not touch him. Well, my hearer, I want you to understand that by God's grace the flames of trial, instead of consuming your soul, are only going to be a wall of defence, and a canopy of blessing. God is going to fulfil to you the blessing and the promise, as he did to Polycarp. "When thou walkest through the fire thou shalt not be burned." Now you do not understand; you shall know hereafter. In heaven you will bless God even for the hornet.

RELICS RECENTLY DISCOVERED ON THE NIGER, AFRICA.

A Boy or an Ox.

The low estimate placed on the value of a boy in Africa comes out in a letter to the Missionary Herald which Mr. Woodside sends from Lakanjimba in West Central Africa. He says: "About a month ago one of the lads who has been here with us for several months came to me much agitated, saying that they had sent word for him to come to the chief's village, for, as there was considerable sickness, they were thinking of making a feast to the spirits, and that this lad was to be given for an ox to be killed for the feast. They threatened that if he did not come they would come and take him and tie him up, etc. I told him to send word to his relatives to come here and we would talk the matter over. They did not come, but when I was at the village the chief spoke to me of the matter, as did also the relatives. After considerable talk I offered to give enough cloth to purchase an ox instead of buying one with the boy. An ox was ultimately secured, and it was argued that the boy should furnish the cloth at some future time. This family, in some of its branches, has been accused again and again of causing sickness or death, and they have given one and another member in payment until this was the seventh, and only three or four remained. Two of the lad's brothers I know to be in slavery in this way."

The Hindu's Sacred City.

Benares, on the Ganges, the Home of Hinduism and Centre of Idolatry – Its Ghats, Temples, and Hideous Sacrifices.

ONE of the most ancient cities in the world, and the centre of a venerable and far-reaching religion, is Benares, on the river Ganges. Both city and river are held as sacred by the Hindus. The first reaches far back into the mists of antiquity. It was a famous city nearly three thousand years ago, in an age when Babylon, Nineveh and Tyre were in their prime, when Athens was young and Rome unknown. It is possible that the people of this ancient city, in those early days, may have heard of the fame and glory of Solomon, whose name and the story of whose wisdom and magnificence had spread to "the ends of the earth." Long afterward, in the seventh century, A.D., Benares was visited by a celebrated Chinese pilgrim and philosopher, Hiouen Thsang, who in his writings, which are still preserved in the Flowery Kingdom, described it as containing thirty Buddhist monasteries, attended by over three thousand monks. At that time, he added, there were about a hundred temples of Hindu gods, with idols innumerable. After the lapse of many centuries, Benares still preserves many of its ancient characteristics. It is still, as of old, the religious centre of Hinduism, the principal seat of the worship of Siva, and the supposed abode of that widely-worshipped deity.

Our color-picture on the first page of this issue presents a view of Benares showing a part of the city fronting on the river Ganges. Here the river forms a sweep about four miles in length, the city being on the northern bank, at a considerable elevation. Its dimensions are about three miles in length and a mile in breadth, and it is thickly studded with domes and minarets. Along the river bank are many fine "ghats" or landing-places, erected of solid stone by pious devotees and some of them elaborately ornamented. These ghats are usually crowded with bathers and worshippers, the one term being synonymous with the other, for it is a religious ceremony to bathe in the sacred stream. Along the banks are also many shrines and temples. So narrow are the streets that a carriage can scarcely pass. A peculiarity is that the streets are nearly all lower than the level of the ground floors of the houses. The latter are built of chanar stone, and many are five and six stories in height. Another peculiarity is the painting on the outer walls of the dwellings, whereon are pictured flowers, men, women, bulls, elephants, gods and goddesses in strange confusion. There is a multitude of small temples, many being of graceful form and covered with carvings.

Thousands of Brahmans are to be found in Benares at all seasons, but at the time of the great festivals the throng is such as to crowd every dwelling, street and square in the city with priests, pilgrims, devotees and mendicants; many coming from the most distant parts of India and even from Burmah and Tibet. Large numbers of rich Hindoos, in their old age, perform the pilgrimage to the "sacred city," desiring to worship at its shrines and bathe in the "holy Ganges" ere they die. As they scatter their wealth lavishly, the throng of mendicants attracted thither on such occasions is quite unprecedented.

At the "ghats," are the places set apart for the burning of the dead, a ceremony of frequent occurrence in Benares, and which is shown in the colored illustration. Great piles of dried wood, broken into even lengths, lie along the river-side, and this wood is made up into bundles, and after being consecrated by the priests, is sold to the relatives of those whose bodies are to be burned. The bundles are placed on the stone copings of the "ghats" and saturated with oil; the bodies, draped in white linen or cotton cloth, are placed on the top of the funeral pyre and one of the relatives applies the fire which soon communicates to the entire pile. Sometimes half a dozen columns of dense, suffocating smoke, ascending simultaneously from as many "ghats" testify to the popularity of this method of disposing of the dead. There is usually a simple ceremony.

A Hindu in Native Dress.

What Mecca is to the Mohammedan, and Jerusalem was to the Jew, Benares is to the Hindu. No severer indictment of Hinduism can be given than Benares affords. The superstitions of the people in bringing their sick and dying and dead to the Ganges, the filth of the streets, the cholera-breeding tanks, and the general poverty and ignorance of the people are the answer to the claims of Hinduism as a propagator of intelligence and civilization. So flagrant have been the violations of all sanitary laws by the pilgrims to these great feasts that the severest measures have to be adopted by the British officers in India to prevent the spread of cholera and other diseases.

Relics of a Past Age.

SOME very remarkable curiosities have recently been excavated at the banks of the Niger Delta, Africa, which are of great interest to antiquaries. Concerning them, the London Graphic says: "Their precise archæological and anthropological significance is as yet somewhat obscure. It is hoped that Sir Wollaston Franks, the keeper of the Ethnographical Department in the British Museum, may be able to assign them a more definite period and history than would appear at present justifiable."

The various objects which are shown in the illustration are of a fine rich green color, and apparently of the early bronze age. The designs are slightly suggestive of Chinese influence. They consist of anklets, armlets, bells, knives, scarabei and representations of animals. One armlet (No. 4) is formed of horseshoes of twisted wire, drawn-up bosses with a small wire ring fixed on the apex of each, and strands of wire, mostly in groups of three, with their ends turned up.

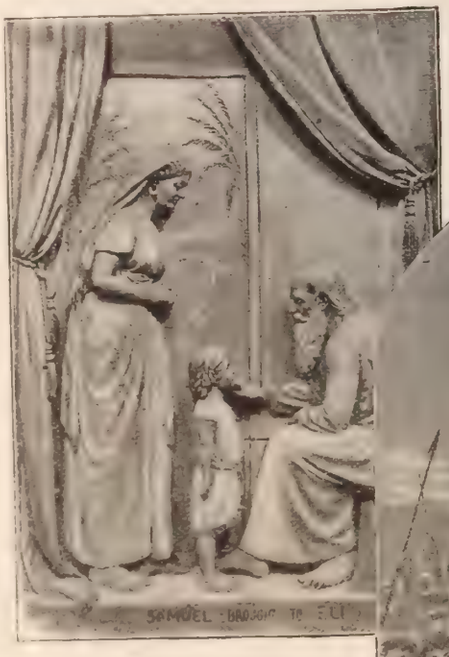
These are placed alternately, and the whole secured by means of two strong pieces of wire forming the edges; in fact, made in much the same manner as a nineteenth century jeweller would construct a gold bracelet. An anklet has a design in which scarabei and birds' heads appear. Fig. 8 is supposed to be a sacrificial knife.

REVIEW OF THE QUARTER.

S. S. Lesson for Dec. 29. Psalm 78, or Heb. 11: 24-40. Golden Text Matt. 6: 10.

THE period to be covered in the Review Lesson of this week extends from the death of Joshua to the middle of the reign of Saul. There are, as was explained, when we were considering the lesson of October 6, two estimates of the length of this period, owing to the divergence of the two methods of reckoning the chronology of the Book of Judges. According to the one method, it was a period of about 364 years, and according to the other, of about 530 years. The difference is not important to the teacher who follows the Bible method of inculcating moral and religious lessons, and that is the object of the Bible record. To the historical student, dates are all important, but the men who wrote the Scriptures were concerned with spiritual life and progress rather than with chronology. That the facts occurred as they are set down the Christian reader can have no doubt, but whether they are recorded in consecutive and chronological order is not known.

The picture of the condition of the nation at the beginning of the period is a gloomy one. There was no organized government, but every man knew the general principles of the Mosaic law, understood in outline what his duty was, and he was expected to fulfil it. In the words of the inspired historian, "Every man did that which was right in his own eyes." It was a time of struggle. Enemies were on all sides and in the midst. On the southwestern border, the Philistines had settled and were continually trying to encroach on the Hebrew possessions; on the East, were the Moabites, a war-like nation usually hostile to the Israelites, and disposed to plunder; on the south were the Edomites, also unfriendly; and scattered through the country, were settlements of the original Canaanites, who by fraud or force had succeeded in escaping expulsion. When Joshua died no progress had been made [illegible] the original division of the land, in increasing the Israelitish territory. Indeed, in some instances, ground had been lost [illegible] Canaanites had recovered territory that Joshua had taken from them. The Hebrews had also lost ground in another way, that the sacred chronicler regarded as far more disastrous. Association with the Canaanites and the Philistines had brought about religious degradation. God's people were found attending the feasts and festivals of idolatrous worship, and were paying reverence to the gods of their neighbors. The way God took to check this degeneracy, was to stir up the enmity of the surrounding nations, so that there should be no relations but hostile ones between them and his people. God uses that method still. When the church and the world become friendly, and the church accepts favors from the world, and in gratitude sacrifices some of its austerity, it often happens that persecution breaks out and the unholy alliance is roughly and painfully sundered. Christians are, as far as is possible, to live in peace with all men, but they must not sacrifice their principles for the sake of peace. When God sees his child turning to the world and forgetting him, he sends such trouble upon him as will force him to seek his Lord and cling to him for his very life. If peace and prosperity lead to impurity, then peace and prosperity must be withdrawn, for God's children must first of all be pure.



SAMUEL SHOWING SAUL TO THE PEOPLE.

Ten lessons are included in the review. They are: 1. The time of the Judges, showing the dangers of evil associations. 2. The triumph of Gideon, an illustration of what may be accomplished by a man who has faith in his God. 3. Ruth's choice, the lovely idyl with its lesson of fidelity rewarded. 4. The child Samuel, an example of the honor and usefulness that may come even to a child, whose heart is pure and who serves God. 5. Samuel the Judge, a lesson teaching how people who have wandered from God, and are being punished for it, may regain his favor and get relief from their suffering. 6. Saul chosen king, a warning that physical beauty and martial courage are not the sole requisites for a useful career. 7. Saul rejected, an instance of a man wrecking his life by disobeying God and setting up his own judgment in opposition to God's commands. 8. David anointed, a lesson of good cheer for the humble and lowly, showinng that when God needs a man to do work for him, he may select one who is despised, but who is quietly doing his duty in his humble calling. 9. David and Goliath, an illustration of a wicked man trusting in his strength, being brought down by a youth, trusting in his God. The enemy of God being armed and protected with all that the world counts formidable, overcome by simple means, directed by faith. 10. David and Jonathan, the two friends who could not be alienated by selfish considerations, men who loved each other for the good qualities in each other and were faithful in adversity

I come to thee in the name of the Lord. It seemed an unequal struggle. The gigantic man with his huge sword and spear against David who came in the name of the Lord. But it is a mighty name and many strong men have gone down before it. Three years ago, in New York the struggle for pure municipal government between a minister of the Gospel and the corrupt police force with Tammany at its back seemed a hopeless one. People sneered at Dr. Parkhurst, and even people who sympathized with him and deplored the evil he was grappling with, had no hope of his success. The men in power were so strongly entrenched, the wealth at their command was so large, their supporters so numerous and influential, that it was supposed that only a great political organization could hope to cope with the evil. What could a clergyman without political influence do? But Dr. Parkhurst fought his own way, with the weapons of his calling, and the judges, police officials and politicians who derided him and opposed him lost place and power. The man who enters the lists against evil in high places in the name of the Lord is a formidable foe, though in his battle he has to contend with giants.

DAVID SELECTING STONES FOR HIS FIGHT WITH GOLIATH.

The battle is the Lord's. When that is really so, he has abundant means for winning it. In 1588, Philip of Spain determined to conquer England and crush the Protestant religion. The most renowned Catholic soldiers in Europe flocked to Philip's standard. In all, a well equipped force of 45,000 men was assembled, a great army in those days. The fleet consisted of one hundred and thirty powerful warships. Elizabeth's fleet was insignificant in comparison. It could never have contended with the Spaniards. But when the Spanish fleet sighted the English coast it was so weakened by the storms, that the English fleet ventured to attack it, and more stormy weather coming on, the invading fleet was dispersed and a fresh attack was made by the English admiral. The losses sustained from the elements by the enemy were so great that only fifty-three battered hulks survived the expedition and crawled ignominiously home to Spanish ports.

David took a harp and played upon it, so Saul was refreshed and the evil spirit departed from him. Numerous instances are on record of melancholy being removed, or anger and madness appeased, by music. The following is one instance: Sultan Amurath, a prince notorious for his cruelty, laid siege to Bagdad; and, on taking it, gave orders for putting thirty thousand Persians to death, notwithstanding they had submitted and laid down their arms. Among the number of the victims was a musician, who entreated the officer to whom the execution of the Sultan's order was entrusted, to spare him for a moment, that he might speak to the author of the dreadful decree. The officer consented, and he was brought before Amurath, who permitted him to exhibit a specimen of his art. Like the musician in Homer, he took up a psaltery which resembles a lyre, played upon it, and accompanied it with his voice. He sang the capture of Bagdad and the triumph of Amurath. The pathetic tones which he drew from the instrument, rendered the prince unable to restrain the softer emotion of his soul. He not only directed his people to spare those among the prisoners who yet remained alive, but also to give them instant liberty.

A JOURNEY UP THE NILE.

Arab Donkey-Boys and Policemen—Memphis and its Mummies—The Gizeh Museum—A Vocal Memnon—Ceremony of "The Sacred Carpet."

Written Exclusively for "The Christian Herald," by Rev. W. Jay Peck, M.A.

TO properly see the temples along the Nile in Upper Egypt, at least, it is best to buy a government ticket of admission to them all. It costs five dollars, and will admit you to all the wonders of ruined Memphis, the Colossi of Rameses, the Necropolis of Sakkara, the Step Pyramid, Marietta Bey's House, the Tomb of the Apis (bulls), the Tomb of Ti, and the Mastaba of Mera.

ENTRANCE TO THE PYRAMID OF CHEOPS.

Landing at Bedrashen—the stopping-place for Memphis—we were surrounded by forty vociferous donkey-boys, each clamoring and fighting for the privilege of showing us what is left of the once far-famed city. We only needed three donkeys and boys. They would take us all day for two shillings each (or for fifty cents), and a shilling goes to the donkey-boy who carries your wraps and dinner and whacks the poor beast. His money is fully earned. The boys got to fighting to see who should take the contract. A cruel Egyptian policeman, compared to whom a New York blue-coat is the embodiment of a gentleman, walked into the crowd and struck right and left with a rawhide, on their heads and shoulders. He looked to me like one of Pharaoh's taskmasters, who, probably in that same region of Memphis, drove the children of Israel to make bricks without straw. A little later we saw some poor, naked Nubians ,making Nile mud bricks about a foot square. The brick-makers only get two and a half piasters per day. An overseer drove them to work faster under a broiling sun. It looks as though there was still a system of slavery carried on up the Nile. Nubians were plowing the fields where old Memphis stood, getting three piasters (or fifteen cents) a day, and women two for labor in the fields.

Memphis—"the heaven of the good"—was built in the dim ages by Menes. It was no doubt once a thing of beauty though now so dreary and desolate. We rode for miles over its vast ruins, the ruins of a city whose streets were half a day's journey in length. We paused at the image of Rameses the Great to think of the littleness of all human greatness. His sceptre was once potent as Neptune's trident; now he is only a harmless mummy, to be gazed at by the curious in the Gizeh Museum.

Talking of mummies, there used to be plenty in the necropolis. As we rode into the ancient burial-place, Ibrahim picked up a skull, whose nose protruded from the sand. He hid it in his toga, till a convenient place was reached, and then placed it between the ears of a white donkey which was ridden by a brave lady tourist. She gave a scream of horror, and turned her face from the grinning object. She then asked Ibrahim "How much he would take for it?"

The "Step Pyramid," suppose by some to have been built by the Children of Israel, is slowly wasting away. Steps that could be used by a giant lead you to the top where a notable panorama lies before you. In the distance are the minarets of Cairo, the Mokattam hills, the pyramids of Gizeh, the windings of the sacred river, the fertile strip beyond the yellow band of the desert, while nearer you look upon ruined brick walls, rock caverns, the tombs of Mera, of Ti, the Tomb of the cats, the Pyramid of Teta, and the vast pyramids that skirt the desert. At our feet are the sites of palaces, the domes, temples, houses and streets of fair Memphis.

In the tombs we were conscious we were in grand vaults dedicated to the dead—the house appoinied for all the living, the final resting-place. We felt disappointed at not finding a single king in his tomb, where evidently all had expected to lie till the resurrection, from the care with which they made their graves. They built hidden halls and intricate corridors, and had them sealed up and the entrance covered, but all in vain. At Deir-El-Bahara we were shown where the mummy kings were discovered in 1870, by Maspero, and there also we saw a mummy dug up.

For hundreds of years the buried kings were in hiding, in truly Egyptian darkness. Some scarabs told the secret to the world. Some of those ancient scarabs—little metal or stone imitations of the beetle, the emblem of immortality—were sold at big prices to tourists on the Nile. A few fell into the hands of a professor at Bulak. He followed this clue and looked for a fresh and unopened burial place, A vender of scarabæi, who was in the secret, revealed to him the place. He conducted them to Thebes and showed them the way to the secret mummy chamber at Deir-el-bahara. Then they were conducted to a shaft forty feet deep. At the bottom was a hallway and corridors which they followed and in the core of the mountain they found a chamber six feet high, where were thirty-six mummies of royalty and priesthood. All were carefully bundled up and put in the museum at Boulak. Again, later, the mummies were moved to the Gizeh Museum on the banks of the river they had loved and perhaps worshipped. Among them is the mummy of Seti I. His son, Rameses, by whose side I lingered long, was the old-time Napoleon of Egypt and no doubt the king that oppressed the children of Israel. One could almost read in that selfish and stern mummy-head a cruel, tyrannical character.

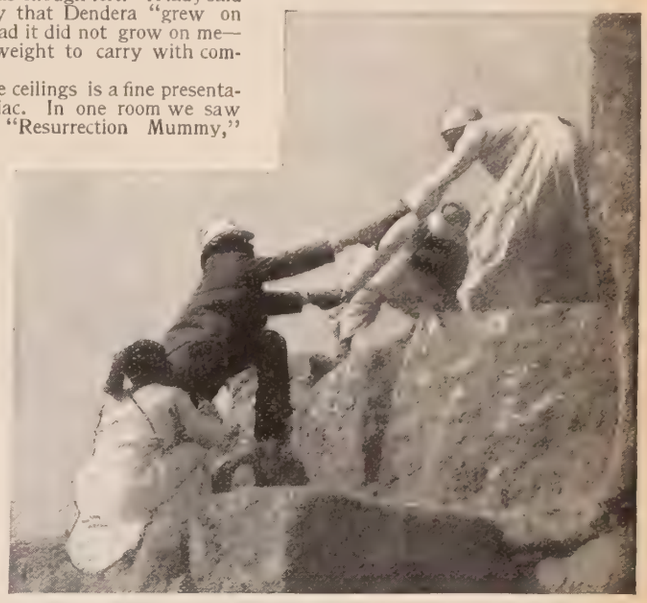
At intervals during our Nile journey we passed temples thrown into fine relief by the grey mountains, the yellow sands or the groves of palm-trees that cluster around them. Many of the temples are in decay. The one at Dendera, we are told, was in excellent condition, and we found it so. The propylon, it is true, has lost one of its horns, but it has enough left. A lady said enthusiastically that Dendera "grew on her." I am glad it did not grow on me—it is too great weight to carry with comfort.

On one of the ceilings is a fine presentation of the Zodiac. In one room we saw the so-called "Resurrection Mummy," evidence that the Egyptians believed in a future existence for the body. Outside and inside this vast and beautiful temple are inscriptions that would answer for a fair-sized history of the world. It is right to admire them and if possible to read them all, but we did not, for we were in a hurry.



CLIMBING UP THE GRAND PYRAMID

On the way back to the river I had the joy of riding a tall and swift member of the donkey family, and I urged him to do his best. It seemed as though he would. Once or twice the ass answered me—as they will. Balaam understood his, but I did not mine. Near the landing was a wide and brimful irrigating canal. The water had just been turned on. The donkey did not like to leap it, but it had to be done—and quickly, too. To my urging, the boy, a fat, good-natured soul, added arguments that were not altogether unefective. The brute gave a leap, shot through the air, and just missed the other bank. We both tumbled into the ditch. He got out and so did I, with no worse mishap than a lively shake-up.

Among the noteable sights on the Nile are the Colossi called by the natives Tama and Chama. The north Memnon certainly has a female figure, and besides, she is the one that is said to be vocal. Her colossal arm, which rests on her knee, is eighteen feet long. He foot is ten. At the annual inundation the water comes only to her foot-stool, while she looks over miles of an inland sea. Here, since the world was young, the pair have sat together, viewing the restless race of the world for wealth, fame and power. The Greeks supposed the northern Memnon made melody to welcome Aurora. I waited to hear if she would speak, or sing. I waited till the sun was near the purple hills, when lo! I heard a weird sound, as if from sad lips. I am certain I did. Again I heard it—a melody—a harp-like strain. I was convinced it was produced by a pair of good vocal chords, for, after the last strain of music had died away, I caught sight of a spry Arab climbing down from her capacious lap. He demanded a big present. The mystery was solved!

The sail down the Nile was as charming as the voyage up had been, giving us opportunity to visit more of the tombs, temples and ruined cities. When we arrived at Cairo, we were told of the death of Ismail Pasha, a former khedive. His body was on the way from Constantinople, where he had died in exile.

Cairo is always gay and bewitching with oriental life and color. The people dress in bright apparel. If it is cotton or the cheapest calico, it must still be gorgeous in tint. The love of color is a part of their emotional life. It is infectious, and after a few weeks I found I was unconsciously investing in bright things. The street scenes were brilliant, while those of other cities are somber. I bought for a trifle a vest of as many colors as the rainbow, a white toga, blood-red shoes with a tassel, and with these and a red fez, I could mingle with the natives as one of them. So I found it easy to enter into their life.

One day, I received an invitation to attend the ceremony of the "Sacred Carpet." It is their most popular religious festival. At the hotel a piece of the carpet was given me by an English lady who saw it made. It was of silk and velvet. Silver and golden threads were used. I was early at the Citadel. On the plaza were many styles of brilliant carpet. One was a spacious velvet canopy, spread on the back of a camel richly caparisoned. In such canopies, formerly the wives of the caliphs rode to Mecca. A score of sections of carpet, stretched on long frames and borne aloft by sturdy devotees, was carried to Mecca to be deposited in the Temple. When Khedive Abbas arrived in a carriage, drawn by six white horses, the enthusiasm broke out in cheering and dancing and song. As the carpets born by the men paraded before him, he threw out handfuls of small coin to the crowd. The boys got most of it. Then the procession received his blessing. The trip takes three months. When the pilgrims reach Mecca they march seven times around the temple, then deposit the new and receive the old carpet, which is generally brought back with the same pomp to Cairo, to be divided among the faithful. No description can do justice to the splendor of the caravan as it starts. A long line of cavalry, with beautiful Arabian horses, is followed by the royal band. Next come the proud soldiers, followed by the "ships of the desert," gayly dressed. Then follow the Khedive and his suite, immediately preceding the carpet; then sheiks, priests, officers of state, and an endless procession of donkeys, camels and common people in all kinds of raiment. All the hues of the rainbow were blended there. It was a spectacle never to be forgotten. I could not but contrast all the glitter and show of their festival, with the sweet quiet of our Christmas and Communion seasons. But our faith means more to us than theirs to them.

ALL NOW HELPING ARMENIA.

Christian America Pouring in Its Gifts to the Fund—Our Commissioner Forbidden by the Porte to Enter Armenia, but the Relief Work Progressing Uninterruptedly.

SOMETIME after the departure of Mr. William Willard Howard, our Commissioner to Armenia, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD was notified by the State Department at Washington that the Sultan's government might possibly regard our envoy as a hostile person, in consequence of certain letters and articles he had written to the leading American newspapers, after his return from his first visit to Armenia last summer. In these articles (which did not appear in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD), Mr. Howard told the simple truth about the terrible suffering in Armenia, and its cause. But the Turkish government hates the truth, and all the more bitterly does it hate it when it is written or spoken by a Christian; and so, when it learned that this truthful American was revisiting its dominions, on a mission of mercy, it resolved to prevent his entrance by every posssible means. The government of Turkey and the Sultan himself, had decreed the utter extermination of the Armenian Christians, and here was an opportunity to strike a deadly blow at the starving survivors of the recent massacres, and simultaneously to gratify the desire to punish the American envoy, by excluding him from that unfortunate country. This object was accomplished, Mr. Howard being prevented by the Turkish officials from crossing the frontier opposite Van, and a notification of the order for his exclusion being sent to Mr. Terrell, the American Minister at Constantinople, who cabled the fact to this country.

REV. GEO. C. RAYNOLDS AND WIFE.

On this page are presented photographs of the leaders of the little band of American missionaries at Van, toward which only a few days ago, the tide of pillage and massacre seemed to be setting. Fortunately the situation at Van, as appears from the cablegrams, is not now so critical. A cable message from Mr. Hallward, British Vice-Consul at Van, received a few days ago, states that a letter from Dr. Grace N. Kimball is on the way and makes no mention of imminent peril, so it is reasonable to assume that the demands of the American minister for ample protection to the missionaries has been fully complied with. Just how Dr. Kimball and her associates are progressing in their relief plans will doubtless be made known in her letter. Dr. Kimball is a native of Bangor, Me., and went out to the Armenian mission field in 1882. She has rendered most valuable service as a medical missionary, is considered one of the most capable of women in the service, and owing to her wide experience among the Armenians and her knowledge of their simple home life, she has been specially successful in relief work in the early part of the present distress. Her associates, Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Raynolds, Mrs. Allen and Miss Fraser, are all missionaries who have a thorough acquaintance with the field.

Although more massacres have occurred at several places during the week, there has been a comparative cessation of disturbance at others. The startling facts concerning the extent of the late massacres is all now coming to light. According to reliable estimates telegraphed to London from Constantinople, the total number of those who have perished by fire, famine and the sword in Armenia and of those who are probably now dying of hunger and cold, is not less than 500,000. Within the area from Trebezond to Van and from Alexandretta to Karahissar, a large number of Christian towns have been pillaged and burned and their inhabitants massacred. Many of those who have been left alive have been compelled to turn Mohammedan. All too well has Abdul Hamid's order of extermination been carried out, for in many districts there is not now a Christian remaining.

MISS KATE B. FRASER. DR. GRACE N. KIMBALL. MRS. ELLEN R. ALLEN.

AMERICAN MISSIONARIES CONDUCTING RELIEF WORK AT VAN, ARMENIA.

Mr. Howard's recall from the field, does not, even in the slightest degree, impede the work of the distribution in Armenia of the Relief Fund subscribed through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Previous to his arrival in the East, two remittances from the Fund had been sent to the American Missionary Committee in the Bible House, Constantinople, to be used in the relief work, and communication had been opened with Dr. Kimball, at Van, by cable. Last week the remittance from the Fund was forwarded to Constantinople through the American Board of Commissioners, the money being sent by cable to W.W. Peet, Mission Treasurer, Constantinople, to be distributed under the direction of Rev. H. O. Dwight, head of the Missionary Committee, "with special reference to sufferers in the neighborhood of Van." Thus, the works goes steadily on, notwithstanding the exclusion of Mr. Howard by the Porte. And it will continue to go on as originally intended, the major portion of the Fund being devoted to the destitute in the Van district, where they will be substantially aided by Dr. Kimball's industrial relief plan, and such other measures as the missionaries at Van have seen fit to introduce to meet the pressing needs of the thousands of starving families. Thus, every dollar sent to the Fund now, at the time of greatest need, goes straight to the centres of suffering, and accomplishes the mission whereunto it was sent. There is absolutely no tax on the Fund for expenses, all moneys being cabled weekly to the Missionary Committee at Constantinople by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and the entire cost of our commissioner's journey to Armenia being voluntarily borne by the proprietor of this journal.

All indications point to such early action by the powers, as will gradually restore peace to Armenia. Their demand to be permitted to send extra guardships through the Dardanelles has been denied by the Sultan, but will probably be enforced, and may be the initiatory step to much-needed reforms. But, while the powers are engaged in outlining policies, multitudes of Armenians—those who have not bowed the knee to the Mohammedan Baal—are dying of starvation. To save at least a portion of these helpless ones is the object of the Relief Fund. As the Christmas season approaches, with all its hallowed memories of Him who came to bring peace on earth and good-will to men, let not the homeless and destitute Christians of Armenia be forgotten. All contributions will be acknowledged in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

To Him That Overcometh!

OFTEN think," said my young friend, Edward Saulus, "that it is strange that there is so much in the Bible about overcoming. Just as if life were all an uphill road, with trials and fighting on every hand. Now, so far, I haven't had much to overcome."

"No, Ned," said Uncle Ralph, passing a wrinkled hand over his forehead and brushing back a great rough mass of shaggy iron-gray hair, much like the mane of an old lion, "no, Ned, you have had a pretty straight path thus far. A good home, kind parents, a good education, and money enough to live on. But, don't boast, my boy! To every mortal on this earth, the good Lord sends the hour of struggle; we have it hand to hand with Apollyon, sooner or later, and the old adversary of souls is wily, wily; he takes you when you are at a disadvantage, tired, and sorely put to it, and sometimes he downs you. But," said the old man, starting to his feet and pacing the floor, "the Christian may shout, 'Rejoice not over me, my enemy; though I fall, I shall arise again!' 'He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment, and the Lord will not blot out his name from the book of life!'"

"Father," said Lucy Benson (Uncle Ralph's married daughter from the South, who was paying us a visit), "tell these good people the worst time you ever had in your life."

"Lucy, I will," said the old gentleman, solemnly, "though Ned here will not see how hard it was. He has not had the key to such puzzles yet.

"It was when I was twenty-five years old, and Lucy's mother was dying before my eyes; dying of slow starvation, because in the sort of wasting sickness that had fallen on her, the doctors said she must have change of air, and travel, and plenty of fruit and nourishing food, and everything a rich man could compass for his wife, and a poor man couldn't get to save his soul. And my heart was breaking with grief and anxiety.

"I was a clerk for Boyd & Truslow, and I had a very small salary and saw no chance of promotion. Some people might have thought Mary Anne and me foolish to marry at twenty-one as we had done, when our means were so small, but we loved each other, our wants were few, and we knew we could manage on a little, if anybody could. We didn't count though on the children coming so fast, and Mary Anne's losing her health.

"The two boys and Lucy were, you may say, only babies. Mary Anne was growing weaker, we were very poor; I worked all day, and I'm not ashamed now to say I sometimes cried at night, for I was in a hole, a slough of despond, and I couldn't see my way out. Now and then I'd find myself wishing we were all in heaven together.

"Now, Edward, if you can put yourself in my place, fancy how you would have felt, if, things being at their very blackest, Mr. Boyd, your employer had said to you one Saturday night, paying your wages, 'I'm sorry, Ralph, but we've got to cut down expenses and dismiss some of our force. We won't need you after another two weeks. Come to me if you want a recommendation. I'm as sorry as I can be, but I can't help myself. We must retrench.'

"I give you my word, I staggered home that night half blind. My brain was dizzy. I did'nt know what would become of us. Staggering on like one beside himself, I stumbled over something hard, and mechanically I stooped down and picked up a thick, fat, bulging pocket-book. I looked up street and down. There was nobody in sight. I thrust the pocket-book into my breast pocket, and ran—fairly ran home.

"The children came to meet me, and Mary Anne, sitting up among her pillows smiled when I opened the door, but I took no notice. I tore upstairs to our little attic, locked myself in, and counted that money. There were fifteen hundred dollars in that book.

"I tell you, fifteen hundred dollars looked big that night. What wouldn't it do? I saw Mary Anne well, I saw myself easy in mind and body. I coveted that wealth for my dear ones, and the longer I looked at it, the more I wanted it, and the bigger it grew in my eyes.

"Then, there came to me, clear as a voice from heaven, the sound of my angel mother's voice saying, 'Ralph, thou shalt not steal!' 'The money is not yours!' went on that pleading voice of the mother who had been in glory since my early childhood, 'The money must go to its owner! My Ralph cannot demean himself to be a thief!' Yet my soul clamored to keep the money.

"The devil and I had it out then and there. I fell on my knees and prayed, prayed as for my life! Then I went down stairs, gave Mary Anne my week's wages, and slipped around to my pastor's house. Ned, I didn't dare keep that temptation of a pocket-book in my own hands over Sunday. I gave it to Dr. Thomson to keep for me, or for the owner, till I could advertise it on Monday.

"To make a long story short, the owner was found, and she,—it was a woman, no man would have gone tramping around so carelessly with such a lot of bank bilis,—gave me one hundred dollars reward. That was a God-send. It gave Mary Anne her first start at getting better, and she lived, bless her, to bring all the children up. Better still, the woman told in her home about my honesty, which was only right, and my poverty which was grinding enough, and her husband sent for me, and found a place for me in his mill, and from that day on to this, I have never been in debt, and have never known want. I went on from step to step, till I became a mill-owner and a rich man myself."

"It was a dark hour though, father dear," said Lucy, softly, "and I am proud that you overcame." Lucy kissed the wrinkled but fine old face.

"Not proud, daughter Lucy, not proud, dear child, but very thankful. For we do not conquer in such battles in our own strength, but only in the might of him who is stronger than we."

"Uncle Ralph," said Ned, rising, and holding out his hand, "I feel ashamed that I am so crude and superficial. I don't know how I would stand in the hour of temptation. I have seen good fellows go under. But, God helping me, if I ever do find myself pitted against Apollyon, I will do as you did, and resist him to the uttermost, calling on my father's God."

THE ASHANTI KING'S BED-ROOM.

Enemies in Fellowship.

In connection with the Japanese occupation of Formosa, the following interesting incident is published by "The Church at Home and Abroad:" In the town of Makung, on the Pescadores, is a native mission church of Chinese converts. When the Japanese army arrived, some Japanese Christians, including an officer, found this out, and they have united with the Chinese Christians in their worship. The hostility of warfare is forgotten at the altar of Christian worship. Brotherhood rises to its place of supreme significance, and hearts, whether Japanese or Chinese, which are linked to Christ, are also linked to each other. The morning service is in Chinese and the afternoon service in Japanese, but all attend both services. One of the Japanese Christian officers wrote to an English Presbyterian missionary residing in Taiwanfu, the nearest missionary station, on the west coast of Formosa:

"We are here in Pescadores. We do not know what will be our future; but at present we are doing our best to help the Chinese Christians in this place. They have all been keeping their Sunday services with us in the Lee Pai Tong (the Chinese word for chapel). We Christians in this detachment are not many, yet we made ourselves into one body in his name, and we earnestly pray that the great truths of the Lord might be revealed in this part of the world, and strike into the dark bosoms of China and her continental neighbors, and thus quicken the coming kingdom." Thus a common brotherhood in Christ draws men into fellowship and communion who are enemies to each other by race and nationality.

The Secret of Peace.

When Joseph John Gurney, the Quaker banker and scholar, went on a visit to Dr. Bathurst, Bishop of Norwich, in 1830, he was charmed with the serenity of the Bishop, then in his eighty-fifth year. He remarked that what he saw reminded him of the exquisite description of a tranquil old age which Cicero gives in his "De Senectute." The Bishop replied:—"Joseph, my tranquility is founded on the merits of Jesus Christ."

Royalty at the Equator.

IT would be difficult to imagine a greater contrast than that presented by the trappings of royalty, as it exists in Europe, and royalty's surroundings in equatorial Africa as presented in the illustrations on this page. The boudoir of an African queen is simplicity itself, while that of the king is almost equally plain. These pictures are from sketches made by the correspondent of a London paper, during the last Ashanti war. There is some slight pretension to ornamentation in the apartment of the king, but that of his royal spouse seems to be little else than a bare room, with a mattress or raised mat laid upon the rush-strewn floor. These pictures disclose an amount of Spartan simplicity which is hard to reconcile with the general impression that love of display, however cheap and tawdry, is a leading characteristic of savage royalty.

Why the Miner Yielded.

Evangelist Moorhouse went on one occasion to the mining districts of Yorkshire, England, to hold services among the miners. Not long before there had been a terrible disaster in which a large number of men had lost their lives. It was hoped that the awful fatality might have disposed the survivors to think of their eternal interests. The men, however, were as careless and profane as ever, and one, named Tom Brown, who was known as "the worst man in Barnsley," was especially abusive. Mr. Moorhouse preached on the love of God. After the service a Christian man who was there said to him, "You made a great blunder: you ought to have told those miners that they would go to hell,—you should not have told them God loved them." The next night, Mr. Moorhouse said, 'I was told I made a great blunder in saying God loved you, but," he said, "I am going to repeat it;" and he preached from the same text. Presently the tears rolled down their cheeks, and "the worst man in Barnsley" was weeping. Mr. Moorhouse asked him if he wanted to be saved, and he said, "I do, if God can save me." That night that man passed from death unto life.

ARMENIA.

ARMENIA, O Armenia!
Will nations heed thy cry,
Or must thou feel the Moslem's steel
Till all thy people die?

Thy land that once held Eden,
Where Adam went to dwell,
The savage Turk by fearful work
Hath made it now a hell.

Where Noah's mighty mountain
Uplifts its ancient head,
And views a plain piled high with slain,
Armenia's martyred dead!

Where maidens, Christian maidens,
Knelt down to fiendish Kurds,
And on the air they breathed a prayer
We dare not frame in words.

A prayer that even a savage
Might listen to with pain,
As daughters fair with bosoms bare
Begged simply to be slain.

To woman's prayer was answered
A demon's mocking laugh,
And then the knife that ended life
Seemed kinder far by half.

O chivalry of England!
Of Europe! Of the earth!
Your swords should flash, your cannons crash
For human right and worth.

Ought Turkish tigers shepherd
This primal Christian fold,
And boast of crimes unnumbered times,
Too awful to be told?

Wake, lion-hearted Richard!
Shake off the clinging sod!
And once again lead Christian men
Against these foes of God.

True Patriotism.

I BELIEVE there are now, and have been all along the line of American history, men who served the country through pure love of the country. Do you know how much money Washington received for his services as Commander-in-chief of the Army in the time of the American Revolution? Not one farthing. His successors in the army have received their $17,000 or $19,000 salary a year. But for Valley Forge, and Monmouth, and the Delaware crossing, and all the other horrors of the Revolution, Washington received not a farthing. What but pure love of country inspired Governor Nelson, of Virginia, during the Revolutionary War, when, at the siege of Yorktown, Lafayette asked him to what point the cannon had better be directed, and Governor Nelson answered: "Point to that house; it is mine, and the best house in town, and Lord Cornwallis will surely be occupying that as his headquarters." What but patriotism led Lydia Darragh, at Germantown, when she overheard in her own house the enemies of her country in a council of war, planning for the capture of Washington, to take a horse, as though she were going to the mill, and inform Washington of the proposed attack just in time to allow him to escape? What but patriotism led Bismarck, when at one time he was threatened with death because of his effort to get Germany away from the Austrian clutches, to cry out: 'What care I if they hang me, provided the rope by which I am hanged binds this new Germany firmly to the Prussian throne?" Thank God, in all lands and in all ages there has been a spirit of patriotism abroad and there are men and women to-day—hundreds of thousands—who would die for their country if the exigency demanded it. I adjure you, cultivate love of city, love of State, and love of nation. Our lot has been cast in pleasant places.

Great Conquest.

EVERY autumn, every spring, great conventions are telling a story of conquest for God and the truth and the purification of society that ought to fill the land with doxologies. While they are celebrating the great things already done, they are laying out plans for the complete renovation and salvation of this continent. No general in consultation with his officers ever drew out a campaign of such vigor, brilliancy, and comprehensiveness as that recently projected in these religious convocations for the subjugation of all wrong and the establishment of all right. Baptist, Methodist, Episcopalian, Presbyterian and other denominations never saw such a day of prosperity or glowing anticipation as to-day. The battle of centuries in which Christianity has been assailed with all human and diabolical fury, is about to culminate in the eternal triumph for our side if we are on the right side. Those were great victories for Pompey's host when they had captured 1,500 cities and defeated 2,000,000 men. That was a great victory when, at Alesia, Cæsar had seventy-four standards surrendered to him, and he overwhelmed an army five times as large as his own. That was a great victory when at the battle of Dunbar, Cromwell's troops rushed on with the watchword, "The Lord of Hosts. the Lord of Hosts!" and the fog that had hidden the battlefield suddenly lifted, and, taking that sunburst as a divine encouragement, the great English general shouted: "Let God arise, let his enemies be scattered!" and all along the line the cry was taken up and re-uttered until their enemies were in full flight, and the victors halted and sang Psalm cxvii, of David: "Oh, praise the Lord, all ye nations; praise him all ye people, for his merciful kindness is great toward us, and the truth of the Lord endureth forever. Praise ye the Lord." And all the armies shouted: "Praise ye the Lord!" But all the victories ever gained by English or American or German or French armies put together would be tame compared with the time when our Lord of Hosts shall drive back the armies of sin from all the earth, and peace shall be declared for all nations. The bravest fight we now make is only a skirmish. God hasten the Armageddon. Then the psalm of Cromwell's men at Dunbar will be overpowered by the clapping shields of all the church militant as they celebrate the day when the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our God!

Confidential Letters.

NO man who has had any extensive correspondence, but has in the pigeon-holes of his desk, or in packages put away, letters which, if exposed, would make family trouble, or business trouble, or social trouble, or political trouble. A man who betrays the confidence of postal correspondence sinks forever in the estimation of all right-minded people, but the law ought to put its clutches upon offenders of that character and pronounce their behavior criminal,and either by fine or imprisonment, or both, put a stop to such outrages. The whole tendency of things is to break up confidence between man and man and woman and woman. The evil was abroad so long ago as the time of Martin Van Buren, President, who said the rule of his life was never to write a letter and never destroy one. But the evil has increased, and all young people need to be educated in the sacredness of private correspondence. If the time comes when you think, for the cause of justice or the public good, some things you have had written to you should be put in type, communicate with either the author or authoress of such epistle and get permission to print. But take a confidential letter and either pass it around for perusal in social circles or put it on the wings of the newspapers, and the crime of which you are guilty is that which the police courts should take hold of.

Two Ladders.

IT will be a mighty boost toward the millennium when we try to build others up instead of trying to pull them down. There is an enormous amount of common-sense in the world, and every man, in the course of time, fully demonstrates his real character and value, or worthlessness, and if a man in any sphere is now passing for more than he is worth, he will, after awhile, do something or say something that will allow the world an opportunity of taking his right measure. Anyhow, we will have as much as we can do to attend to our own work and move in our own sphere and meet at last our own account.

Room in this wide world for us all. Bury your hatchets. Sheath your swords. Spike your guns. Sweeten your sarcasms. Choose between two ladders which St. Paul makes in Galatians. The one reaches down and the other reaches up. The ladder going down has for its rounds, among others, hatred, variance, humiliation,wrath, strife, seditions, envyings, murders and such like; but the other ladder reaching up has for its rounds love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith. Take your choice of the two ladders.

OUR MAIL-BAG.

Mrs. R. L. Knapp, Lowell Mass., writes:

The premium case of books arrived yesterday. I placed them on the table, thinking to look them over at my leisure, but they are in such demand, I can hardly get hold of them. All who have seen them say "how nice they are, how I wish I had a set," etc., etc., and when they learn that I obtained them as a premium with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, wonder that I could get so much reading for so little money.

All speak well, too, of the attractive bindings and pretty case, so I have no reason to regret that I gave up a paper I had taken for years for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

W. H. Halberstadt, Farmersburg, Ind. What evidence is there that Jesus was born on Dec. 25?

No positive evidence. The earliest record of the nativity being celebrated on that day is a passage in the writings of St. Chrysostom which shows that in A.D., 386, the observance was general. The only serious doubt about the date arises from the idea that at that period of the year shepherds would not have been in the fields in December all night watching their flocks. As a matter of fact, however, there is evidence that they were very likely to be there. December falls between the early and the latter rains when there is plenty of herbage, and when in Palestine the cold is never severe. Andrews, who has made an exhaustive study of the arguments for and against the observance, thinks that the probability is in favor of the December date.

M. M., Elk Ridge, Md. We read (1. John 1: 9): "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." After a man has experienced that blessing, is it proper and orthodox that he should continue the prayer of the Publican, or its substance, in his approaches to the Mercy Seat, although he may not feel that he has committed any actual or wilful sin since his change?

No; the true Christian, after repentance and confession, accepts salvation through Jesus Christ, and takes God at his word unquestioningly. His sins are forgiven, if he asked forgiveness in the right spirit, and it would be doubting God and displaying a lack of saving faith to repeatedly implore forgiveness for past offences. He is thenceforth a child of God, and should mingle with his prayers a request to be kept from sin and strengthened to resist temptation.

Celia D——, Rantoul, Ill. I wish you would stir up a dozen of the most prominent newspapers to open a fund for the Armenians; for if the suffering is half as great as reported, all that the subscribers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD can do, will be as "only a drop in the bucket," and relief ought to be sent at once.

We would, if it were possible, multiply the sources of Armenian relief a thousand-fold. The newspapers are fully aware of the great need, but as we cannot govern the action of others, we must be content to do all that lies within our own reach toward alleviating so much suffering. We are now sending weekly remittances by cable to Constantinople, and if all our friends help the cause, a great deal of good will certainly be accomplished. It is difficult to understand how any one possessing a heart, could remain indifferent.

"Reader," Truro, N. S. 1. How is Christ's assurance (John 4: 14) to be reconciled with the fact that people fall from grace? 2. Do the fruits of the Spirit such as purity, honesty, etc., result naturally from true conversion or must the Christian strive to produce them? 3. Is perseverance in good works the only test of conversion?

1. Christ said that the water that he would give would satisfy, but he never forces his gifts on any one. If the man neglects to seek it, he does not get it and his fall is a natural consequence. 2. Those fruits are to be expected from true conversion but the man must not be passive and expect to have the virtues conferred upon him. He is promised divine help and he is assured that with that, he may overcome, but he will probably have to struggle with temptation and he will need to be vigilant. The desire to sin and the love of it receive their death-blow in true conversion, but the force of evil habit and association have often caused men to fall into sin. There is, however, this difference, that when they fall after conversion they are sorry for it and ask forgiveness while before conversion they were not distressed by it. 3. No, it is one of the tests but not the only one. The change of disposition. the increase of love to God and the spirit of kindness and helpfulness are tests. A man may know that he is truly converted by his own spirit, without waiting to the end to see whether he perseveres.

Miss Julia B——, New York City, writes:

Your premium Bibles for 1895 surpass those with which you favored your subscribers in 1894, and they were the most satisfactory editions for teachers that I had seen. I have subscribed for three, and you may be sure I shall recommend them as opportunity offers.

Constant Reader, Ashland, O. Should the people of the United States give aid to Cuba or Armenia by sending troops?

No; our national policy is non-intervention, and avoidance of entanglements in the affairs of other nations. This, however, does not prevent the extending of practical sympathy and relief, such as America is now sending to Armenia through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Guelph, Canada. 1. Is there more expected of an active member of a Christian Endeavor Society than of a Christian who has not joined the Society? 2. What is the address of the President of the Society?

1. We do not know what may be expected of him, but the Society requires nothing of its members but what is the duty of every Christian. It is an association of Christian young people for mutual help in their own spiritual life and for aggressive work. The pledge they take is a means to that end and as experience shows it answers the purpose. The society simply helps them to be better Christians and to work more effectively in the cause of Christ. 2. Dr. Clark's address is 646 Washington street, Boston, Mass.

"Weak One," Akron, O. Before I was converted I was addicted to a certain sin and I am now tempted to return to it! The fact causes me to doubt whether I have really been converted. Am I right?

No, the recurrence of the temptation is no evidence of itself that your conversion was not genuine. It was sure to return. There may be physical reasons why it could not be otherwise. You may have a hard struggle but you will conquer if you hold fast to your faith and do not cherish doubts of Christ's readiness to help you. Whenever temptation comes upon you, look to Christ instantly for succor and meet the temptation in his strength. Your conversion should never come in question. It rests on the assurance God gives to every man who puts his trust in Christ. You have God's word for it; now you have to go forward to do battle with your old enemy, but now you are armed with divine power and need not fall if you will use it.

James Elder, Virden Manitoba. Is there any evidence that Mary, the mother of Jesus, belonged to the tribe of Judah? The fact that her cousin Elizabeth belonged to the tribe of Levi (Luke 1: 5), would suggest the possibility, at least, of Mary being of the same tribe.

There is no direct evidence. It is, however, now generally believed that the genealogy given by Luke is that of Mary. It was a Jewish custom to speak of a man's son-in-law as his son. Thus if Heli was the father of Mary, Luke might still write according to the popular custom as he does (Luke 3:23) that Joseph was the son of Heli. Matthew says that Joseph's father was named Jacob (Matt. 1:16). If that theory is correct there is no doubt of Mary belonging to the tribe of Judah. The fact of Elizabeth being of the tribe of Levi does not prove anything as to Mary. The Levites having no territory assigned to them on the division of the land were scattered among the other tribes. It was quite possible for the two girls to be cousins while belonging to different tribes if the mother of one of them married a Levite and the mother of the other married a descendant of Judah.

Thomas Gibson, Dos Palos, Cal. Is it safe to substitute some other duty for the one in which we have Christ's example? (See John 13: 14).

If men went about now barefoot or only with sandals, and it was still the custom for a servant to wash the feet of the guests before a meal, there would be reason in the observance; but to follow it under present conditions is to show a slavish obedience to literalism. It is perfectly safe to follow Christ's spirit of humility and service, and that spirit can be manifested more truly and more usefully in other ways than in washing each other's feet. A woman who will wait on a sick neighbor and do menial work to relieve her, or a man who will go a journey to oblige another, or do some other service for him that he needs, is more faithfully and more intelligently obeying Christ's injunction, than would do by simply washing his feet, which the man could do for himself.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

The Atlanta Exposition.

GRATIFYING reports of the success of the great International Exposition at Atlanta, Ga., are made by the managers. It has been a genuine surprise to all visitors from the North and West. In spite of newspaper reports of Southern progress and the development of business and manufactures, people were not prepared for such amazing proof of the advance that has been made, as is furnished by this exposition. A full description of the buildings, with illustrations, was published in this journal on October 30. The promise then given of a brilliant success has been more than fulfilled. The exhibits prove that in art, science, manufacture, agriculture and horticulture the Southern States have made greater progress during the last quarter of a century in view of their depression after the war, than any other section of the country. Of the fourteen States represented in the exposition, each has some special feature, besides indicating general development. Georgia herself is the leader, and her exhibit shows that not only in cotton and woolen industries, but in machinery, furniture, pottery, and many other products she is capable of producing all that is needed by the people of her own section. Louisiana, Alabama and Arkansas have made exhibits still more remarkable when their circumstances are taken into account. But, probably, there is no feature of the exposition that has occasioned more surprise and more general gratification than the exhibit of the colored people. They are to be congratulated on their success in all departments. Especially in the educational exhibits from Hampton and other schools is there encouragement for hope of still more rapid advance in the future. It is clear that some of the young men whose work is shown, have the capacity of leaders from whom great things may be expected. Of the architectural characteristics of the exposition we have already spoken in our former article, but we cannot refrain from mentioning with special praise the beautiful Chime Tower of which a picture appears on this page. It is the highest of all the exposition buildings, and is singularly elegant and graceful. The music of the bells has been a great delight to all visitors to the exposition. They are sweeter in tone than any bells in the country, and the chimes have been played with remarkable skill. The lady who plays them is said to be the most accomplished bell-ringer in America, if not in the world, and there is a special feature of interest in her performances, in the fact that she was born in Atlanta. It seems almost incredible that but little more than a quarter of a century ago this whole section, now so thriving and prosperous, lay distracted and desolate amid the horrors of war. The position they have attained shows what marvellous recuperative energy they must have possessed. We may hope, too, that their spiritual progress will always keep pace with their material prosperity. The many able and devoted preachers in the South are not likely to let their people forget that Righteousness exalteth a nation while sin is a reproach to any people. (Prov. 14:34.)

Counterfeiters at Work.

A large quantity of counterfeit money is reported to be in circulation. W. P. Hagen, Chief of the Secret Service Division of the Treasury, says that the counterfeiters have utilized the latest scientific discoveries to aid them in their nefarious business. During the past year Chief Hagen's men have arrested over eight hundred counterfeiters and have seized counterfeit bills of the aggregate face value of two and a half million dollars. Most of these counterfeits had been made by the photo-lithographic process, and were therefore exact fac-similes of genuine bills. The perfection to which this art has been brought renders the imitation easy, and it is only by the difference in the paper used that the genuine can be distinguished from the counterfeit. Chief Hagen fears that even this test will soon fail, as the counterfeiters are finding out how to make the paper with the distributed silk threads in it, that the Government uses. If success in that direction is attained, the public will be at the mercy of the swindlers, as only an expert will be able to detect a counterfeit bill. This is not a pleasant prospect, and it will be the duty of the Government to devise some means of rendering the operations of the counterfeiters more difficult. It would be well if some means could be discovered for protecting the Church against similar frauds. It has often suffered loss and reproach by them isconduct of professors, who like wolves in sheep's clothing, have pretended to be followers of Christ when they have experienced no change of heart. They succeed in deceiving clergymen and church officers, but their final detection is inevitable.

The Lord knoweth them that are his. (II. Timothy 2:19.)

A Boon to Patients.

At the recent meeting of the Philadelphia Medical Society, Dr. T. Parvin explained to the assembled surgeons the new method of relieving patients of pain under operations. It was discovered by the famous German surgeon, Professor Schleich, who has used it successfully in the Berlin hospitals. It differs from the ordinary method in the fact that the patient does not lose consciousness during the operation, though he feels no pain in the part of the body operated upon. The part is thoroughly cleansed by an antiseptic solution, and its temperature reduced by a spray of chloride of ethyl. When the surface has become numb under the spray, hypodermic injections are made in all directions with a solution of salt, cocaine and morphine which renders the inner tissues also insensible. The operation is then performed, and for a period of half-an-hour, the patient feels no pain from the cutting and sewing. Dr. Parvin said he had used the method in this country, and had found it perfectly effectual. The benefit of the discovery will be inestimable, especially to patients who, owing to affections of the heart, cannot, with safety, be deprived of consciousness by chloroform or ether. The same principle operates in the spiritual world. Men who are conscious of spiritual maladies, and are constitutionally prone to various forms of sin do not need to withdraw themselves into monasteries and hermits' caves, shutting themselves out of life, as the etherized patient is shut out of his consciousness of life. They fulfil Christ's will better when they are rendered impervious by their own resolve in the strength of the Holy Spirit to the temptations to their besetting sins.

I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil. (John 17: 15.)

The Prisoners' Friend.

A friend of the late Col. L. S. Hargous in the course of some reminiscenes of the famous merchant tells how extensive were the obligations he conferred on his fellow-countrymen in their difficulties. In 1846 and for twenty years afterward Col. Hargous conducted a large banking and shipping business at Vera Cruz, Mexico. In the early part of his career there were a large number of United States citizens suffering imprisonment at the fortress of Perote. The greater number were confined for political offenses and many were prisoners of war. The discipline of the fort was rather lax and the prisoners had many chances of escape of which they were not slow to avail themselves. But outside the fort they were in imminent danger of being caught and carried back to captivity. They had no money and as the frontier was closely watched they had no hope of getting out of the country but by sea. Both difficulties could be overcome by Col. Hargous' help. He was rich and he had ships continually going to and fro, but the utmost caution on his part was necessary, as the Mexican government would not suffer him to continue doing business in the city if they found that he was helping prisoners to escape. A selfish man in his position would not have imperilled his business interests for the sake of men who were strangers to him. But Col. Hargous was not that kind of man. Any escaped prisoner who appealed to him found his purse open and a free passage provided for him; the Colonel stipulating only that he should not reveal the source of his assistance. The risk Col. Hargous ran in thus helping the prisoners caused him great embarrassment which, his friend says, was increased by the "ungrateful carelessness" of the escaped men who when they reached the United States did not scruple to tell newspapers who it was that had aided them. Their stories sometimes reached Mexico through the press and Col. Hargous was often in danger of expulsion, yet to the last he continued to befriend the prisoners who came to him. The good man was not deterred from his kindly work by the ingratitude of those he helped. In that he was like Christ, who has often reason to complain of the ingratitude of those whom he has delivered from the bondage of Satan, but their fault is the converse of that of the Mexican prisoners. They ought to speak the praises of their deliverer but neglect to do so.

Many believed on him but because of the Pharisees they did not confess him. (John, 12:42.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Rev. B. Fay Mills has Arranged to Hold a series of evangelistic services at New Haven, Conn., commencing January 6.

The Many Friends in this Country of Mr. R. C. Morgan, the esteemed editor of the London Christian, will sympathize with him in the loss he has sustained in the death of his beloved wife.

Rev. Jacob Freshman, D.D., preached on Sunday, December 8, in Romeyn Presbyterian Church, New York. While waiting a call to a pastorate, Dr. Freshman will be glad of opportunities to hold special evangelistic services. His address is P. O. Station O, New York City.

An Interesting Service was Held at Mt. Olivet Baptist Church, New York, on December 1. An address was given by Cleretta Avery, the ten-year-old colored girl whose portrait appeared in this journal last week. Several persons were impressed by the child's simple eloquence and asked her to pray for their conversion.

It is Estimated that Mr. Moody Preached to over two hundred thousand persons during his campaign at Atlanta, Ga., which closed on Dec. 1. The Tabernacle was crowded every time it was opened, and the great evangelist's earnest sermons were listened to with eager attention. Mr. Moody paid a brief visit to Augusta before returning to Northfield.

Rev. A. P. Werden and Evangelist Fred J. Mills have been conducting revival services at Flowers, Boone Co., N. Y. The Wesleyan Church has been crowded every night for two weeks past, and during the day the two workers have visited the people in various parts of the town and held meetings for prayer and praise. Some very remarkable conversions of notoriously irreligious men have taken place.

The Financial Report of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions shows that the receipts for six months have been $292,927 against $209,856 for the corresponding period of last year. The different departments show gain as follows: the church—general donations—$8,872; young people's societies, $4,039; legacies, $24,423; miscellaneous, $56,792; Sabbath Schools show a falling off of $731, and the Women's Boards of $10,324. The net gain is $83,070.

Rev. Grant C. Tullar and Isaac H. Meredith have been holding revival services at Vineland, N. J. The churches uniting in the movement were the Presbyterian, Methodist, Congregational, and Baptist. The evangelists, encouraged by the earnest spirit manifested, labored indefatigably, frequently holding three services in a day, besides outdoor services and meetings at noonday in the shops. It is believed that fully three hundred conversions took place.

Dr. L. W. Munhall's Services at Binghampton, N. Y., have resulted in a wonderful blessing. Over five hundred persons have made confession of Christ during the campaign. The Tabernacle Church large as it is, would not accommodate the crowds that thronged to hear the preacher. At every meeting large numbers rose to ask the prayers of God's people for their conversion. Miss Fanny Crosby, the blind poetess, addressed the women's meetings.

A munificent Friend of Taylor University, at Upland, Ind., has generously offered a gift of twenty thousand dollars toward the endowment of a chair of Missions on condition that the same amount shall be raised in four years by other friends of the institution, making the endowment $40,000. Dr. Steinen of the Taylor University has been appointed to develop and organize the medical department of the new American University, at Washington, D. C., of which Bishop Hurst in Chancellor.

Sunday, Dec. 15 was the Day Fixed by the various Societies working for the abolition of war, for united prayer that the nations of the earth may be led to settle their differences by arbitration, and men may learn war no more. Pastors are respectfully asked to deal with the subject in their sermons. If Christian people in every land were a unit in demanding arbitration in international disputes, an important step would be gained in the direction of universal peace.

The "Dismal Swamp."

Once the Favorite Refuge of Fugitive Slaves, and Now a Scene of Peace and Quietude. An Open Air "Baptizing."

THERE are many persons who, whenever the "Dismal Swamp" is spoken of in their hearing, conjure up in their minds a great quaking morass. They, with many others who haye only a faint idea of what the "Dismal Swamp" really is like, wjll no doubt be surprised at a scene like that shown in the illustration on this page from a photograph taken in its very depths. A goodly portion of the swamp is drained and under cultivation, and on the farms here the negro lives a quiet, uneventful life, broken into by a revival, or "protracted meeting,' during the month of August, when little work is done and all give themselves up to religious duties. Afterward comes the baptizing, and one of these occasions was recently caught by the camera at a point on the North-West river, a few miles from Lake Drummond—which the poet Moore has celebrated in verse as the "Lake of the Dismal Swamp."

The name "Dismal Swamp" was given during slavery days, to two extensive stretches of morass on the seaboard. The larger of the two, distinguished as the Great Dismal, lies in the peninsula between the James River on the north and Albermatle Sound on the south, and thus belongs partly to Virginia and partly to North Carolina. Its length from north to south is about forty miles and its breadth about twenty-five. The greater part of the area is covered with a thick and almost impenetrable stratum of vegetable soil, without any mixture of earthy particles, which at once supports and is augmented by a luxuriant growth of aquatic plants, brushwood and timber. The prevailing trees are cypress, juniper, and white cedar, and on the higher ridges oak and beech. The surface of the swamp is actually higher in some parts by as much as twelve feet, than that of the surrounding country; so that, except on the western side, where it receives a few small steams, the waters flow outwards. The centre is occupied by Drummond Lake, an oval basin about six miles long and three wide, with perpendicular banks and an extreme depth of fifteen feet; the water is clear and abounds with fish. The swamp has long furnished large supplies of timber, much of which has been obtained by excavation from the peaty soil in which it was preserved. The transit is facilitated by means of canals. Two lines of railway pass through the outskirts of the Virginia portion of the swamp. The Little Dismal is of much less importance. It lies in North Carolina, in the peninsula between Albermarle Sound and Pamlico Sound; and in the days when slavery was still legal, it, also, was a noted harbor of runaway negroes.

The Bereaved Husband.

In married life there are all possible varieties of affection and devotedness, represented in their extremes by the distance between the poles. The parting, when it comes, writes Bishop Thorold of Winchester, divides one life rather than separates two; the void that it leaves gapes with a fissure that knows no filling. The soft familiar tread, the rustle of the gown, the music of the bright greeting, the half-timid tap at the study door, the dear caress; the sunny face opposite you at breakfast, the cheek which glowed with an irrepressible joy when others praised you, the feet that ran so nimbly to meet you in the distance, the full and tender heart which never felt shame though others detected its love—they are gone and passed away, and if you live a hundred years can never come back just as they were. There is no one now to cheer you up in the evening. The cares of life are suddenly doubled, for the worries that were kept from you before meet you now. The children are ill, and you must nurse them. The servants leave, and the task of finding others devolves on you. You may have more money now, but she who shared your poverty cannot care for it. When a wife dies, the husband feels the light gone out of his home, the taste out of his enjoyments, the color out of his landscape.

Childish Indulgence.

A child is entrusted with very small sums from time to times, to spend in little indulgences or in Christmas presents. When he goes to school he has more, and as he grows older the amount increases, and with the increase comes a more complicated set of duties. Very possibly there is a school mission to support, and a fraction of his possessions is given to that. Here facts should be ascertained; as compared with the amount spent in indulgence, the total given in charity by schoolboys is a beggarly pittance. And yet people wonder at the niggardliness of adults. The explanation is that never having been taught the duty and the joy of giving, in their early life, they have contrived to frame a rule of charity for themselves, on which they act for the most part with singular consistency. It is that expressed in the cynical definition of the schoolgirl: "Charity is giving away what you don't want yourself."

Influence of the Kindergarten.

Without a doubt the kindergarten is one of the longest steps forward that has yet been taken in the race with poverty; for in gathering in the children it is gradually, but surely, conquering also the street with its power for mischief. The kindergarten, writes Jacob Riis, author of "The Children of the Poor," begins at the very beginning, and in the best of all ways, with the children's play. What it does, counts at both ends on that tack. Very soon it makes itself felt in the street and in what goes on there, as any one can see for himself by observing the children's play in a tenement neighborhood where there is a kindergarten and again where there is none, while by imperceptibly turning the play into work that teaches habits of observation and of industry that stick, it builds a strong barrier against the doctrine of the slum that the world owes one a living, which lies in ambush for the lad on every grog-shop corner.

A Little Girl's Strange Team.

In Central Park, New York, there may occasionally be seen a chubby-faced little girl driving the queerest-looking team that ever was put in harness. They are a pair of elk, the only elk in the world which are driven to harness, and they look very odd when they are driven about the streets of the city. Daisy Woodberry is the little mistress of the elk, and she drives the animals in Central Park and all over the city, much the same as other little girls drive ponies. Last July these elk were in the wild woods of Canada. They had never seen steam cars, nor brick or brown-stone houses, nor paved streets. Many horses are afraid of the noises and strange sights in a big city, but the elk take no more notice of elevated trains, electric cars and bicycles than they did of trees and rocks when they were at home in the woods. They are very intelligent animals. The elder is a buck, four years of age, named Jack; and the doe, whose name is Nettie, is three years old. Nettie has no horns, but Jack has a fine pair of antlers. They are soft and tender, for they are still growing. The elk are now half grown. Their food is much the same as that for horses—oats and hay. They are also fond of fresh clover. They do not kick like horses, but strike out with their front feet when angry. Still they are very patient with their little driver who always treats them kindly.

Fairy Tales.

A child can read choice fairy tales, understanding that they are fanciful, with less danger to his mind and character than he would incur in the reading of a falsely colored religious story-book. In the one case he knows that the narration is wholly fanciful, while in the other case he is liable to be misled through the belief that what is both fictitious and false may have been a reality. Not the wholly fanciful, but the fictitiously false, in a child's reading, is most likely to be a means of permanent harm to him. It is the line between the false and the real in moral fiction that he needs help in defining.

LIFTED OVER.

AS tender mothers, guiding baby steps,
When places come at which the tiny feet
Would trip, lift up the little ones in arms
Of love, and set them down beyond all harm
So did our Father watch the precious boy
Led o'er the stones by me, who stumbled oft Myself, but strove to help my darling on;
He saw the sweet limbs faltering, and saw
Rough ways before us where my arms would fail;
So reached from heaven, and lifting the dear child
Who smiled in leaving me, he put him down
Beyond all hurt, beyond my sight, and bade
Him wait for me! Shall I not then be glad
And thanking God, press on to overtake?

Childish Joys and Sorrows.

IN his joys as in his sorrows a true child wants some one to share his feelings rather than to guide them. If he has fallen and hurt himself, a child is more helped by being spoken to in evident sympathy than by being told that he must not cry, or that his hurt is a very trifling matter. The love that shows itself in tenderly binding up his wound, in a case like this, has less hold upon the child than the sympathy that expresses a full sense of his pain, and that recognizes and commends his struggle to control his feelings under his injury. It is easier, indeed, writes Rev. H. Clay Trumbull, to comfort a child at such a time, and to give him power over himself, by showing him that you feel with him, and how you want him to feel, than by telling him, never so lovingly, what he ought to do, and how to do it. And it is the same with a child in any time of joy, as in every time of grief. He wants your sympathy with him in his delights, rather than your loving approval of his enjoying himself just then and in that way.

How many parents there are, however, who are readier to provide playthings for their children than to share the delights of their children with those playthings; readier to set their children at knowledge-seeking, than to have a part in their children's surprises and enjoyments of knowledge-attaining; readier to make good, as far as they can, all losses to their children, than to grieve with their children over those losses. And what a loss of power to those parents as parents, is this lack of sympathy with their children as children. There are, however, parents who sympathize with their children in all things; and as a result, they practically train and sway their children as they will: for when there is entire sympathy between two persons, the stronger one is necessarily the controlling force with both.

Christmas Kindnesses.

At this season of the year, remember that it is your duty, as children, and also your privilege to glorify God, to promote peace. and to extend good-will among those around you. You may promote the blessing of peace on earth by frankly forgiving those who may grieve or annoy you, by persuading enemies to be reconciled to each other, and by daily prayer to God to preserve the nations of the earth from the dreadful horrors of war. And you may in a great many ways show good-will to men. Are there not poor people within a short walk of your own door who will receive no Christmas cards, no nice presents of food or new clothing, whose children have no nice toys or picture-books, of which some of you have such an abundance that you scarcely know where to find room for them? Perhaps, writes a thoughtful pastor, if you should distribute of your abundant blessings among those who have need of them, you would not only feel gladdened at once by what you have done, but in a far distant time hear the voice that spake as never man spake saying unto you, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, ye have done it unto me."

THE YEAR'S PROGRESS.

iggestions on the Christian Endeavor Topic for the Week Beginning December 29. Phil. 3 : 7-14.

AS the year closes, the mind instinctively turns to retrospection. There is no avoiding the accounting that is to be made. Conscience sits in judgment and records its verdict. What the man has done nd what he is, at the end of this chapter his existence, are both under scrutiny. is possible to shut the eyes to the record, ignore it and to go on heedss into the future, but the cord is made, and if it is not garded, the penalty is postoned, not evaded. The proerbial trick of the ostrich in rying its head in the sand hat it may not see the approaching calamity, is unworthy of intelligent human beings. The course of wisdom is survey the past, that the ssons its events can teach ay serve as guides for the fuure. That is the practical use retrospection. Regret there ust be, and disappointment nd sorrow. The best of men, they are honest with themelves, must be conscious that ey have done things that ey should not have done, and ave left undone things they ught to have done. But reret without resolve is waste time and feeling. The only seful result of retrospection is gain wisdom and strength r a better life in the future. he causes of past failure may e detected, the indiscretions hat have led to disaster should e noted, and the weaknesses hat have given ingress to emptation should be recogized. Like a vigilant commander of a besieged city, the Christian should learn from very assault, the points of reatest danger and the best nethods of defence.

Some such retrospection the Apostle had been making when he wrote the passage connected with the topic. Modesty does not appear to have been a conspicuous feature of Paul's character, but here he writes as one conscious of attainments he had not reached. He represents himself as a man striving after a prize. He turns his back on the past and looks earnestly to the future. He has learned something. It is a question of values. There were some things that he had valued highly, but he had changed his opinion of them. Once he had regarded them as gains, but now they are worthless in his esteem. Indeed, they have sunk below zero, they are detriments. Nothing now is of any value in his eyes but the knowledge of Jesus. To know him and to follow him, to have the power of the resurrection—that is the supreme object of his life. All else is of no account. Spiritual progress is the only progress worth having, spiritual attainment the only pursuit worth following. He was an old man when he recorded this conviction and he knew by experience all the hardship and privation involved in such a life, but there is no hesitancy and no qualification in his declaration. Christ taught the same truth, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God." It is this that Paul makes the rule of his life. To be found in that kingdom, to be accounted worthy of the resurrection is the supreme prize, and he would sacrifice everything to that. Like a traveler in a difficult country laden with property, he finds his treasures impediments, making his progress slow and he casts them away. They were precious to him once, but now they are hindering him from reaching his goal and they are unhesitatingly sacrificed. Like a captain in a storm he sacrifices his cargo to save his ship.

SING TO ME OF HEAVEN.

O SING to me, but not of earth,
It cannot soothe the pain;
But sing of Heaven that blessed land
Where we may meet again.

The world is beautiful, I know,
For God hath made it fair,
But hearts are sad and eyes are dim
With weeping and with care.

Ay, sing to me of Heaven, of home
Where tears shall never flow,
Where genial skies and smiles for age
Their beams shall round us throw.

Oh, sing of Heaven, where never more
A longing wish shall wake,
Where love is life and life is love
Where all the bliss partake.

Ay, sing of Heaven, that land of rest
Where suffering is unknown,
Where joy shall fill each wearied heart
Without a sigh or moan.

THE PALACE OF SONG.

IN an hour of despondence and gloom,
He showed me the Palace of Song;
Where the bending trees in the murmuring breeze
Make music all day long.
Suffused with a rapturous joy,
I heard the seraphim raise
To the hautboys clear in that ringing sphere,
One loud hallelujah of praise.

Majestic crescendoes of joy!
Sweet diminuendoes of love!
And the lyric wine of those songs divine
Transported my spirit above.
Those thrilling and jubilant chords,
That music that never shall cease,
By the crystal flood in the Palace of God
Had spoken me infinite peace.

THE COMING OF THE LORD.

The Subject Important and Urgent—Objections that Deter People from Studying it.

BY REV. GEO. F. PENTECOST, D.D.*

SOME of the more common objections that are urged against the study of prophecy especially of those prophetic utterances which relate to the second coming of our Lord are the following:

1. "It makes people fanatical who believe in this doctrine." Leaving out of the account, that all earnest people are considered fanatics by those who are not in dead earnest, this objection might be urged against almost every great doctrine of the Bible which has been intensely believed and preached in a time when it had fallen into disrepute or neglect by the mass of Christians. Luther, preaching the doctrine of justification by faith was, in his day, charged with making fanatics; so of Wesley and Whitefield preaching the necessity of being born again; so of the doctrine of holiness. Indeed, whenever a neglected truth is taken up and preached with power so that men are stirred.

2. "The believers of this doctrine are for the most part unpractical Christians. They are more interested in the things of the world to come than they are in the practical every-day things of life." This is true, but it is blessedly true. Christ used the fact of his speedy coming to arouse the "practical" Laodiceans out of their lukewarmness. It is because of his speedy coming that we are exhorted to set our affections on things above. A doctrine that will break up the "practical" worldliness of the present church life ought to be hailed with joy.

3. "It gets people into an unhealthy excitement." So did they think who were not in sympathy with the Christians at the time of the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the Day of Pentecost. And so is this cry raised whenever the truth of God is preached in the power of the Spirit, and men's consciences are aroused to consider their sin and the paramount importance of their souls' salvation. And yet I have never witnessed half the excitement upon this subject that I have seen in connection with a hundred secular and worldly interests—politics, for instance.

4. "It frightens timid people." The imminent and speedy coming of the Lord ought not to frighten those who know and love him. Why should a wife be frightened at the thought that her long-absent husband might come at any day or hour? Such a fright on the part of the wife would argue that she was unfaithful, and feared to have her husband come home. The same holds true of unfaithful Christians. But the preaching of death and the judgment frightens people. Must we, therefore, for this reason, give up such preaching?

5. "What is the use of preaching the 'Second Coming?'" Because we have been commanded to do so by the Lord and all his apostles, lest he come and overtake us as a thief in the night and find us unprepared for his coming.

6. "We cannot know the day nor the day nor the hour, no, nor the year nor the generation, in which he will come." If this were true, that is the very reason why we should be on the constant lookout for him. For this very reason He has urged and warned us to "watch and pray," "for in such an hour as ye think not, the Lord will come." If we knew just when He would come, we might fall into the sin of the unfaithful servant, who said: "My Lord delayeth His coming."

FATHER AGAINST SON

OR,

How the Curse of Horse-Head House was Lifted.

WRITTEN SPECIALLY FOR

BY J. C. COWDRICK.

CHAPTER IV Continued.

"I'LL see who will be master here!" Reuben added, with another blow. "I'll see whether you will leave home in this disgraceful fashion or not! I said last night that I would take a hand in this revival business! Why don't you say something? I'll cut you till the blood runs, if you don't give in and get this nonsense out of your head!"

Three times, four times, five, six, seven, eight times, yes, and nine times, did the terrible whip rise and fall, and then——

With an oath the user dashed it to the ground with even more force than he had struck the blows, if possible, and looked more closely to see the awful effect of that last cut.

The blow had fallen a little higher than those that had gone before it, and the cruel tip had fairly bit a piece of the flesh out of one of Will's ruddy cheeks, leaving it hanging there, while the warm blood flowed down his face and dropped upon his coat.

"Father!" he again ejaculated.

The oath Reuben Hilton uttered was against himself.

"Well, don't blame me," he cried, however; "you brought it all on yourself. Go into the house and have that cut attended to, and let this be a lesson to you that my word is law in my own house!"

He turned and started away. "Father, stop."

"Well, what is it?"

"You may think about what you have done, but I forgive you freely. Your word may be law here, it is right it should be, I suppose; but there is a higher Word, a higher Law, which I am bound to obey first. My determination is the same as it was before; nothing shall turn me back from my purpose, God helping me! Before I will pass another glass of liquor to my fellow-man, I would see my right hand wither! Yes, I mean it. That case of Sloan's decided me, as long ago as last fall; two of his children dying—and did die—for want of proper food and medicines, while you took his daily earnings across that bar!"

"That was his business; I had no right to refuse him; my license stands in the way of that, and—

"And it stands between you and eternal life as well."

Will had already picked up his bundle, while he held his handkerchief to his wound with the other hand, and with that last remark he passed out from the wagon-house and went down the carriage way to the street.

CHAPTER V.

The weather was keenly cold that morning, as mentioned. The sky had a heavy, sullen, leaden appearance, as if more snow was ready to fall at any moment.

Already the blood on Will's handkerchief was freezing as he turned up the street, and the wound upon his cheek was burning like fire. He hoped that he might not meet anyone who would question him. He hoped in vain. A man suddenly appeared around a corner just ahead, and Will was face to face with Joe Mosley.

"Heigh-ho!" the "bummer" exclaimed, stopping short. "What is the matter wi' you, Billy, boy? Where ye goin' so early? Why, you are bleedin' like a stuck pig, al-

"I am going away, Joe, that is all," was the answer. "As for my face, I felt something strike me there a minute or so ago; it is nothing."

"Ha! ha! I guess your old man——"

"Look here, Joe, when you speak of my father just call him my father, if you please!"

"Oh! sartinly; but you can't fool Joe Mosley by divin' under like that, my boy; I'm too old a bird. I'll bet your father had something to do with what struck ye; come, now, didn't he?"

"Do you think my father would do such a thing. You had better not let him hear you make that remark, Joe. I give you friendly warning. Good-by!"

"No, I don't think I will," the toper muttered, as Will went on and he stood gazing after him for a moment. "I have got my own opinion about it, though, all the same."

Will saw other men coming, and in order not to meet them, turned into one of the side streets, intending to avoid the main thoroughfare of the village until he could strike into the road leading out into the country. He had an objective point in view, of course. He had not gone far in this direction, when whom should he meet but Fred Wilson, his dinner-pail in hand. This was an unusual sight, almost as unusual as Will's own appearance at the moment.

Fred was a carpenter by trade, but of late he had worked only when he felt like it, and he had not felt like it very regularly. In fact, he had grown somewhat ashamed of his overalls and dinner-pail. His association with the son of the president of the village bank and those of his set, had made him almost despise his humble calling. Both stopped and Fred uttered an ejaculation.

"Will! What's the matter?"

"Something struck me in the face a few minutes ago, that is all, Fred."

"And that is enough, I should say, by the way you are bleeding. But, where are you going?"

"Well, I am going first of all to Deacon Barkmore's. I heard yesterday that he was looking for a hand, and I am going to get the job if I can. Where are you going?"

"Why, I am going to see Beaver. He offered me a few days' work yesterday, and I refused it. I'm going to ask him to take me on."

"Good for you! I wish that I, too, had a trade.

"But, you are not going to hire out as a farm hand—that is ridiculous!"

"What else can I do? I am fitted for nothing else, unless it be to sell rum, which I never will!"

"Well, that is so; and yet you have a pretty good education, and ought to get something better than common labor on a farm. You have got more grit in you than I have got, Will?"

"Maybe I will, in time, but for the present I must take the first thing that offers. However, I must not detain you, or you will be late——"

"No, I have plenty of time yet. Then your father——But, no need to ask you that. What I want to say, you must not go any farther in that condition; you must stop and let mother fix up that cut."

"Do you think she will——"

"What a question for you to ask! Just go around in the back door—for she is in the kitchen, and she will see to it for you."

"Well, I will, for it is quite painful. How do you feel this morning? But, it is hardly necessary to ask you, for this meeting answers the question for us both, I think. I see you mean to hold out."

"I am going to try hard, Will."

"And I am determined, God helping me."

A few more remarks and they parted, and Will went straight to Widow Wilson's cottage. He knocked at the back door, and when the widow came to open it she gave a scream and turned pale at the sight.

"Goodness me!" she cried. "What is the matter, Willie?"

She had known him all his life, and she addressed him affectionately.

"Why, I have got my face cut, Mrs. Wilson," was Will's explanation, "and I chanced to meet Fred and he said he thought you would fix it——"

"To be sure I will! Come right in. I need not ask you what has happened; but where are you going?"

Will told her.

"But, your face; how did it happen?"

"Mrs. Wilson, I prefer not to tell. Please do not ask me to explain."

"I will not, certainly. Wait, I will get some warm water and a soft rag, and you can be taking off your coat."

In her young days Mrs. Wilson had served as an attendant in a city hospital, and the sight of blood had no terrors for her. In fact, she was the first person sent for when any one got hurt.

By the time Will had removed his coat she was ready, and examined the wound.

"Mercy!" she cried. "A piece of flesh has been plucked right out, and it merely hangs there! I must put some stitches in it, if you can bear it. I am afraid it will make a mark that you will carry through life."

"I can stand the pain, Mrs. Wilson. In fact, I may not feel it, my face being cold. Go ahead and doctor it to suit yourself; you know what it requires, I guess."

The good woman had a little case containing curved needles, etc., and in about fifteen minutes she had the laceration neatly caught up, the bleeding stopped, and a plaster over the wound. They talked, meanwhile, but nothing further was said about the wound—that is, as to how it had been inflicted.

"There!" the widow exclaimed, when she gave the finishing touch, "I am not a little proud of that bit of surgery. Now it only remains for me to clean the blood from your clothes as well as I can——"

"That will be too much trouble, Mrs. Wilson; I can——"

"Do you think I would let you leave my house looking like you did when you entered it? I guess not. You had better stay here to-day, anyhow——"

"No, I cannot do that; I may lose the job if I do."

"Well, that is true. But you can stay an hour, anyway. You have had your breakfast, of course."

"No, I have not, Mrs. Wilson, and——"

"Not had your breakfast?"

"If you would not mind giving me a cup of coffee, Mrs. Wilson, it——"

"Just you wait two minutes, and I'll give you something to amuse yourself with while I am cleaning your coat."

"She flew around, and in almost the time specified she had a tempting repast on the table. She talked cheerily the while, and when Will had taken the chair she placed for him, gave her attention to cleaning the garment.

While Will was eating there came a knock.

The widow opened the door, and there was a boy whom Fred had sent with a message for Will.

The son of a farmer living just beyond Barkmore's place was in town, having come in to send some stuff away by express on the early train, and Fred had asked him to drive around and stop for Will when he started for home.

"See!" exclaimed the widow, when the boy had delivered his message and was gone. "See, how all things work together for good, for those who trust him. Trust in him, William, fully trust in him; yield to him in all things. You have started out to be a Christian, and to be that is to be Christ's; simply to yield our will and life to him."

By the time Will was ready the farmer's son came around, and the latter was not kept long waiting. His name was Horace Freeman, and Will knew him, of course. He was about Will's own age. Will thanked the widow for her kindness, and got into the sled with his bundle, the widow calling out a cheery good-by and bidding him not to forget her promise of the night before; and with a crack of the whip the farmer's son started his team, and they were off. A new home, new scenes, new friends, new duties and a new life—all these lay before Will Hilton now.

CHAPTER VI.

Hiring Out as a Farm Hand.

Meanwhile, everything at the Horse Head House was moving on much as usual. The only noticeable difference was that the landlord himself was around at an earlier hour, and that Will was absent.

No one had witnessed that terrible scene in the wagon-house, and no one knew of it save the two persons concerned. Its recollection burned in Reuben Hilton's mind like a coal of fire. He picked up the whip, after Will had gone, and put it out of sight. He hated himself for what he had done, and yet he found excuse—or tried to find such. He forced himself to a degree of calmness and returned to the house, where his wife and daughter were waiting.

"Where is he?" Mrs. Hilton asked.

"He has gone," was the sullen response. "He will be back again, though, no fear about that."

"I hope so. Perhaps you were too severe, Reuben; it might have been better to have allowed him to go his own pace in the matter; he would have become tired of it soon enough."

"What, humor him? Never! What is more, see to it that you and Mary stay away from that church. One fool in the family is enough."

He went on, and entered the barroom. No one was there, and he paced the floor furiously to and fro. He was so doing when the door opened and Joe Mosley shambled in.

"Good-mornin', Mr. Hilton," the toper greeted. "You are up 'arly this mornin', it 'pears."

"Yes," was the snarl.

"It looks as though there had been another storm besides a snowstorm, too. I met Will just up the street there."

"Well, what of it?"

"Nothin', of course, only I remembered what you said last night, and I put two and two together, that's all. Did you have to fire him out? I noticed his face was bleed in' rather freely."

He looked keenly at the landlord as he said this.

Hilton, however, had just put out the light, and his face could not be seen distinctly.

"His face was bleeding?" he asked.

"Yes; he looked like a porker, almost."

"What was the matter with it? Did you speak to him?"

"Yes, I spoke to him, but I got no satisfaction; he said somethin' hit him, that he had felt somethin' strike him a minute before. Mebby it was a piece of ice, or somethin' like that, somebody throwed at him."

"You may be right; anyhow, I guess it was nothing serious."

And so was started the story that Will had been struck in the face by something thrown by somebody, and his father, for shame, was glad to have it so understood.

"Then he is gone?" urged Mosley.

"Yes, he is gone. I gave him his choice of two things, and he chose that. I told you last night what I would do, didn't I?"

"You said you was goin' to take that foolishness out of him, if I 'member right. It seems you didn't do as much in that direction as you figgered on. You found he had some of his dad's grit, mebby; ha! ha! ha!"

Mrs. Hall writes of her Visits to the Famous Palaces—A Snake as an Omen—The Summer Pavilion and the Mulberry Palace—A Plea for Corea's Evangelization.

WHEN I first reached Corea, in 1890, I found the whole country in mourning for the old Queen, Cho. Near relatives dress in mourning for three years. Coreans dress mostly in white, and in such delicate tints of blue and green, that it looks like white in the distance, but when in mourning it must be all white—the black hat and black shoes that are ordinarily worn, and even the black satin and strings upon the head-band, must be exchanged for white, as these are among the most expensive articles of a Corean man's dress. Mourning attire with them as with us is an extravagance. In the case of old Queen Cho, everybody from the highest official to the lowest coolie dressed in white for one year.

When the Great Tai Cho selected the place for his palace in the new land, he had two advisers, one of whom urged him to build at the base of Fuk San (which means North Mountain), while the other prophesied if he built there, a terrible result would follow in 200 years, and he advised building near the west gate (Sa Moon.) Tai Cho, however, erected the palace at the foot of the north mountain, where the new palace occupied to-day now stands; but the prophecy was fulfilled and this place was destroyed during the Japanese invasion 200 years after. After that the palace was built upon the spacious grounds near the Sa Moon, as had been before recommended. It has since fallen to ruin, and is now known as the "Mulberry Palace." To encourage silk-worm culture the enclosed grounds have been set out with mulberry trees. I have often visited these grounds. Only a few of the buildings are now in repair. The Audience Hall shows signs of having once been a beautiful edifice. It is approached by a grass terrace, up which, in front of the hall, are stone steps guarded by carved stone animals, and upon the low stone balustrades are carvings resembling the eagle. The Hall itself has a massive tile roof, now mostly overgrown with weeds and grasses. There are many small stone images, upon the ridge-plates. The rafters are made of smooth peeled logs about four inches in diameter and not more than one foot apart—this is true, however, of all Corean buildings.; the roof of tiles and mud is so heavy that all the supports must be very strong. All the frame-work is made of massive hewn logs. The rafters appear beneath the tiles and together form eaves that overhang the building for three feet or more, turning up in Chinese style at the four corners. The ends of the tiles and the rafters of the old Audience Hall are ornamented. A great deal of fancy wood carving and bright-colored painting gives a pleasing effect to the great overhanging eaves. Within, the ceiling is composed of small panels, painted in neat designs; bright tints of red, green, yellow and blue are the prevailing colors used both in the ceiling within and the eaves without. Entering the Audience Hall we find still some vestiges of the former splendor of the throne. There are images of birds, with great spread wings, suspended over the throne, but many of the beautifully painted wooden panels in the ceiling above have disappeared, and real birds now fly in and out, nesting beneath the roof.

There is also a palace near the East gate, part of which was built by a son of the great Cho, and part by the 10th King, and the remainder by the 19th King of the reigning dynasty. By nature it is perhaps more beautiful than either of the other sites, but its buildings are not remarkable. Their Majesties, however, are generally moving back and forth for some reason or another from this palace to the new palace at the foot of the North mountain. I remember once while I was there the cause of removal was that the Queen saw a snake fall from the roof of the New Palace, and as this was a bad omen they at once withdrew to this palace. The grounds here are well watered, and heavily wooded.

The palace occupied during the recent war stands upon the ancient site selected by Tai Cho. As before stated, it was destroyed three hundred years ago; during the Japanese invasion, it was rebuilt, and again destroyed by the Chinese. It lay in ruin therefore two hundred years, and was only rebuilt during the present reign by the King's father, the Tai Won Kan, who was regent for nine years during the King's minority. This place is surrounded by a wall twenty feet high, that encloses one hundred acres or more. The back enclosure runs fare up the sides of Puk San, and there is an opening out to a still higher mountain known as Puk Han, or the North Fortress, to which the King can escape in time of danger. I spent two delightful weeks on Puk Han one summer. The wild beauty of this wall-enclosed mountain fortress of the King is something never to be forgotten. The palace enclosure proper is just at the foot of Puk San, and is quite level; the outside enclosure is rougher and is used for holding the competitive examination. Scholars come up from all over the eight provinces to these examinations hoping to obtain rank or "pyo sal," as they call it. Each is seated under an umbrella made of oiled paper, in front of him are some large sheets of Corean paper which, by the way, is the strongest and most durable paper in the world, at his side are his ink-stone, cake of lamp-black, and pens which resemble our long handled camel's hair paint-brush. Here comes in the use of the long finger nail so carefully cultivated on the little finger of the hand of the literary man. At these examinations when the water is passed around to rub up the ink with, each scholar's supply is dipped up with this nail.

Passing through to the great south gate of the palace across the large compound where soldiers are drilled, through a second gate into a smaller enclosure, across the moat on a stone bridge guarded by crouching tigers carved in stone, you pass through a third gate into a court where stands the great audience hall. It is built much upon the same style as the one described in the Mulberry Palace, and is a fine oriental building. The beautiful carving and painting that decorate the massive eaves is protected from the birds by wire gauze of Corean manufacture. To the west of the audience hall is a large lotus pond, the surface of which by the middle of July is one mass of lotus leaves and flowers. They are gigantic water-lilies, the leaves two and three feet in diameter, and the beautiful pink blossom measures fifteen and eighteen inches across. A large banquet hall known as the Summer Pavilion, is built over this lotus pond near its eastern side and is reached by two stone bridges; it is perhaps the most beautiful edifice in Corea, and the view obtained from it is delightful. The city with the great East gate (Tong Tai Moon) at one side, Nam Sass (South Mountain) with its soft green grass and beautiful pines in full view in front; to the west precipitous mountain sides of granite, surmounted by Pulpit Rock, while in the rear is Puk San, overtopped by the rugged peaks of Puk Han.

The readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who were interested in Dr. Hall's work at Pyong Yang, Corea, and those who helped him in raising the money with which to buy property for a hospital, may be glad to know that after securing a fine site, building a wall, and making some necessary repairs, there were left 620 yen ($310 gold). Dr. Hall intended to make this the nucleus of a fund that should grow until sufficient to construct good hospital buildings in the place of the small native houses now in use. He had hoped to be ready to begin building as soon as peace should be established in Corea, and he looked forword with much pleasure to having a hospital in Pyong Yang complete in each department. The last Christmas that he spent upon earth, he proposed that we sacrifice the pleasure of making each other and our friends the usual gifts, and instead make our Christmas offering to Pyong Yang, and one hundred yen were laid upon that altar.

Already Corea has stepped out as an independent kingdom among the nations, and she will soon be making long strides toward modern civilization. Dr. Strong says in The New Era the prospect is that in the course of a few generations the heathen world will become either Christian or agnostic—which it will become will depend upon the church.

What can be done to make heathen Corea Christian? No greater help toward this end can be given than to build a Christian hospital in Pyong Yang. This city, the ancient capital of Corea, contains 100,000 people. It is situated upon a large and beautiful river in a fine agricultural district with coal fields and great metallic wealth in its immediate vicinity, and it is bound to become the metropolis of Corea. As before stated, Dr. Hall had already set aside money towards building this hospital in the city which he was the first to open to Christian work. Might it not be the most fitting tribute that could be paid to his memory if his plan be yet carried out? Nothing of the kind would better please him than such a building for Pyong Yang whose people he loved and for whose highest interest he labored and died.

Let the children help,—Dr. Hall wrote, you remember, how in the first place the fund for buying the property in Pyong Yang was started by three little children of the missionaries. "It was only $1.60 and the prayers of God's little ones," but it soon grew to over $1500. Perhaps Corea may become a Christian nation in the lifetime of the children who read this, and if they have helped to make her so, how happy they will feel. Phillips Brooks once wrote, "If I can only place one little brick in the pavement of the Lord's pathway, I will place it there, that coming generations may walk thereon to the heavenly city."

WILL ANY CLIMATE OR CHANGE OF AIR CURE CONSUMPTION?

Cod-liver oil, cough mixtures and change of climate used to be the stereotyped treatment for all consumptive cases, and under it the disease was so invariably fatal that it came to be regarded as incurable. And it cannot be doubted that physicians rather encouraged the belief in its incurability, because their ministrations always resulted in failure.

The thought that consumption could be cured by air alone was one of the oldest delusions of its treatment, It has been persistently tried for centuries, in every climate of the globe, and invariably terminated in disappointment.

We now know that consumption is a germ disease of the lungs common among the natives of all lands. It is a little less common in warm than cold countries, because in the latter congestions of the lungs are more prevalent. The difference, however, is very slight—only a fraction of 1 per cent. Those therefore who go to warm countries with the disease are no better off than natives of sueh countries who have consumption contracted in that climate. As the latter get consumption and die of it despite the climate it is folly to suppose Northern patients would be cured by going to it. Change of air is always beneficial to the general health, because it is helpful to the appetite, digestion and strength of the patient temporarily, but the benefit is only general and in no sense curative of the lung disease. As no natural air can kill the germs in the lungs or heal the wounds they have inflicted, no climate in the wide world will ever cure consumption. California, Texas, Colorado, Florida and the Adirondacks in this country, and Nice, Naples, Villa Francs, Egypt, Algiers and Maderia, in the old world, have all been tried in vain. The graveyards of those countries attest the failure of their climate to cure the disease. It is a cruel deception to pretend that living parasites, which are devouring the tubes and cells of the lungs—as moths feed upon wools and furs—can be destroyed and expelled by any natural atmosphere in the world. No other germ disease of the body was ever cured by air alone and all medical experience goes to prove that the germs of consumption cannot be got rid of by any change of climate.

Do not, however, imagine from this that I am opposed to change of climate or do not regard pure air as necessary to a proper treatment of the lungs The air is the life of the lungs. "God breathed into his nostrils and man became a living soul." Air is the natural purifier of the blood, and the element which assimilates and makes new blood out of the foods eaten, and is therefore necessary to health, just as good food, proper clothing and regular exercise are necessary to good health. Wherever they can be best obtained with the least exposure to injury is the best place for the sick. But what I wish to impress upon all is that no climate in the world will kill the germs of consumption or save from death those afflicted with lung disease. This can be done only by inhaling germ-destroying medicines into the lungs. Such germicides have been discovered by me and I am now applying them with great success in all forms of lung disease. It is only by properly medicating air that it can be made healing and curative of lung complaints. The germs in the lungs are the source of all the danger to the patient. If they are not reached and expelled they destroy the very citadel of life. They cannot be reached by anything taken by the stomach nor by any hypodermic injection through the skin. The germicides must be be brought into actual contact with the germs in the tubes and cells of the lungs or no cure will result. That is why I say that my treatment by inhaled germicides is the only course that can possibly arrest and cure consumption.

The Shepherd and the Sheep.

A GENTLEMAN traveling in Syria, writes Rev. L. A. Banks, relates how he stopped to watch three shepherds who were at a well, watering their flocks. The three flocks were all mingling together the watering place. The traveler could e no difference between them, and he ondered how they would ever get them parated again without great trouble. At presently one of the shepherds stood rth and called out, "Men-ah"—the Ara- c for "Follow me"; and, sure enough, irty sheep immediately separated them- lves from the indiscriminate mass and gan to follow the shepherd off up the ll. Then a second shepherd lifted the y, "Men-ah"; and a second flock separ- ed themselves and started after him, hile the rest of the sheep remained as nconcerned as if no one had spoken at l. The traveler was so astonished that, : he saw the third shepherd preparing to :part—laying his hand to his crook and :ginning to gather a few dates fallen om the palm beneath which he had been sting—he stepped up to him and asked: Would your sheep follow me if I called iem?" The man shook his head. "Give e your shepherd's cloak and crook, and t me try," the traveler said. He even ound the shepherd's turban around his ead, and standing forfh began to cry Men-ah! Men-ah"; but no sheep stirred. hey only blinked at him lazily in the inshine. "Do they never follow any ne but you?" asked the traveler. "Only hen a sheep is sick; then the silly crea- ire follows any one," the shepherd said. What a wonderful commentary this :ory is upon the figure which the Lord esus uses here to represent his relations) us! And what a sure indication it is iat we are sick with the deadly disease f sin when we refuse to heed the voice of ie Great Shepherd, and go recklessly llowing strange voices into the dangerous ays of wickedness.

AN IMPORTANT DISCOVERY.

A Cable Dispatch from London Published by The Independent, announces an important discovery of a mass of documents, letters and unpublished sermons of Charles Wesley. There are in all four- teen of these volumes, besides a roll containing many manuscript poems of the great Methodist hymnist. It is said that an examination shows that many of these poems have not been published, par- ticularly those relating to the American Revolution. The volumes contain several sermons in manu- script.

The Week of Prayer.

The following are the topics for the Week of Prayer, January 5-12, 1896, as suggested by the Evangelical Alliance.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 5TH. SERMONS. "But the Com- forter, the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you."—John 14: 26.

MONDAY, JANUARY 6TH. HUMILIATION AND THANKSGIVING. Confession: Of sins of omis- sion and of commission. Praise: For temporal and spiritual mercies; to individuals, communities, and nations.—1. John 1: 8, 9; Psalm 32: 1-5; Psalm 116: 12-19; Psalm 100; 1. Chron. 29: 10-13.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 7TH. THE CHURCH UNI- VERSAL. Praise: For increasing fellowship among believers since the formation of the Evangelical Alli- ance, fifty years ago. Prayer: That the presence and power of the Holy Ghost may be felt; that the communion of saints may be perfected; that the Word may be preached in its purity.—Acts 1: 5-8; John 17: 20-23; Eph. 4: 16.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 8TH. NATIONS AND THEIR RULERS. Praise: For increasing recog- nition of the rights of conscience during the past fifty years; for the revival of civic patriotism. Prayer: For all in authority, that laws may be wisely enact- ed and faithfully executed; for religious liberty; for peace; for the persecuted; for the abolition of the opium, slave, and strong drink traffic; for all needed reforms—moral, social, industrial, and political.—1. Tim. 2: 1-4; Matt. 5: 10-12; 1. Pet. 2: 13-25; Rev. 11: 15.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 9TH. FOREIGN MISSIONS. Praise: For missionary progress; for the "Student's Movement" and the increased number of candidates for the work. Prayer: For all missionaries in their labors and trials; for missionary societies under their financial burdens; for the opening of new doors as the result of wars in the East; for the sup- pression of the African rum traffic, and for the re- moval of all hindrances; for the conversion of the world.—Isa. 40: 1-5; Psalm 67; Rom. 10: 11-15.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 10TH. HOME MISSIONS. Praise: For increased appreciation of opportunities and obligations. Prayer: For missionaries and other laborers; for missionary socieites; for in- creased offerings; for the heathen at our doors; for depleted rural districts and neglected city popula- tions; for increased Christian comity.—Luke 10: 1, 2: 14: 21-23; Isa. 60: 1-5; Mark 9: 38-40.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 11TH. FAMILIES AND SCHOOLS. Praise: For the gracious promises to the godly and their children, and for the increasing number of young disciples. Prayer: For a deeper sense of the sacredness of the family relation; for parents, children and servants; for increased Christ- ian nurture; for Sunday and day schools; for Chris- tian associations of young people.—Mark 10: 13-22; Matt. 19: 3-9; Deut. 11: 18-21.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 12TH. SERMONS. "Let him take hold of my strength, that he may make peace with me."—Isa. 27: 5. "The greatest of these is Charity."—1 Cor. 13: 13.

THEE FIRST AND LAST.

THEE first and last, my God, my King,
The closing year thy praise shall sing:
And while I tune my harp again,
My soul repeats her glad Amen!

I know not what may lie before,
I only see an open door;
I only feel a guiding hand
As duty answers love's command.

What if my vision could command
The prospects of the opening land;
Would then my soul so closely cling
To thee, my Father and my King?

Better my hand be still in thine,
Be lost my will in will divine;
Where can a child so safe abide
As pressing to a Father's side?

Thee first and last, my God, my King,
The opening year thy praise shall sing;
And each succeeding day shall be
A fresh memorial, Lord to thee.

COTTOLENE COOKS

Should remember to use only two-thirds as much Cottolene as they formerly used of lard or butter. With two-thirds the quantity they will get better results at less cost than it is possible to get with lard or butter. When Cottolene is used for frying articles that are to be immersed, a bit of bread should be dropped into it to ascertain if it is at the right heat. When the bread browns in half a minute the Cottolene is ready. Never let Cottolene get hot enough to smoke.

THESE IMPORTANT POINTS: The frying pan should be cold when the Cottolene is put in. Cottolene heats to the cooking point sooner than lard. It never sputters when hot.

A Cuban Country Home.*

THE interior was divided into two parts. Several posts had been placed in the ground and lashed to the rafters overhead. Pieces of royal palm bark had been fastened to these poles, and a certain amount of seclusion was possible to the inhabitants. This enclosed portion of the house was used by the women and children as sleeping quarters. The men attached to the encampment slung their hammocks in the open part of the house, which was also used for general purposes during the daytime. In the morning, on rising, the men rolled their hammocks up so that there was plenty of room for lounging purposes.

A short distance from the house was a smaller structure of a similar style of architecture. This was used for cooking purposes. In the centre a small space had been set aside and filled with earth and stones. On top of these stones a fire was made. Other stones furnished resting-places for the iron pots while in use for cooking purposes. A few tin cups and plates were the only articles for table use. Knives and forks were not to be seen. One large spoon was used generally in eating.

The coffee was entirely different from that made in other countries. The green berries were parched in the iron pot. They were then placed in a wooden mortar, where the coffee was pounded into a very fine powder. In cooking the coffee for consumption, a small quantity of this powder was placed in a sack made of coarse cloth. This sack was hung in a rude framework. The boiling water was then poured into the sack, and it dripped through into the cup which was placed beneath. In boiling the water the juice of the sugar cane, or, if obtainable, some raw sugar, is generally added. But a very small quantity of this strong coffee was considered necessary for a single person. In some Cuban country houses, I learned that where any pretension was made to wealth, the housewife had three or four China bowls of coarse manufacture. These were used for coffee drinking, A portion of coffee early in the morning, at about sunrise, is all that the Cuban generally takes until noon, when the breakfast is eaten. The three meals during the day are served successively at twelve, six, and about ten o'clock at night.

The Magician and the Genii.*

THERE was a great magician, who was the ruler of all the Genii in all the world. They were all powerful and rich, and wonderful magicians, but he could make them obey him, and give him what they stored away. And he said: 'I will build a splendid city that all the world shall flock to and wonder at and remember forever. And in it some of all the things in the world shall be seen, so that the people who see it shall learn what the world is like—how huge it is, and what wisdom it has in it, and what wonders! And it will make them know what they are like themselves, because the wonders will be made by hands and feet, and brains just like their own. And so they will understand how strong they are—if they only know it and it will give them courage and fill them with thoughts.'"

She stopped a moment, and Rob pushed her gently with his elbow.

"Go on," he said, "I like it. It sounds quite true. What else?"

"And he called all the Genii and called them by their names. There was one who was the king of all the pictures and statues, and the people who worked at making them. They did not know they had a Genius, but they had, and he put visions into their heads, and made them feel restless until they had worked them out into statues and paintings. And the Great Genius said to them: 'You must build a palace for your people, and make them pour their finest work into it; and all the people who are made to be your workers, whether they know it or not, will look at your palace and see what other ones have done, and wonder if they cannot do it themselves.' And there was a huge Genius who was made of steel, and iron, and gold, and silver, and wheels, and the magician said to him: 'Build a great palace, and make your workers fill it with all the machines and marvels they have made, and all who see will know what wonders can be done, and feel that there is no wonder that isn't done that is too great for human beings to plan.' And there was a Genius of the strange countries, and one who knew all the plants, and flowers, and trees that grew, and one who lived at the bottom of the sea and knew the fishes by name, and strode about among them. And each one was commanded to build a palace or to make his people work, and they grew so interested that, in the end, each one wanted his palace and his people to be the most wonderful of all. And so the city was built, and we are in it, Robin, though you are only twelve years old, and nobody cares about us."

"Yes," said Robin, "and the city is as much ours as if we were the magician himself. Meg, who was the magician? What was he?"

"I don't know," said Meg. "Nobody knows. He is that — that —" She gave a sudden, queer little touch to her forehead and one to her side. "That you know Rob! The thing that thinks—and makes us want to do things and be things. Don't you suppose so, Rob?"

OUR HELPER.

Psalm 28:—5:7.

LIGHT from the throne of the Highest proceeding
Falls on our vision, though feeble and dim:
And the great Father in mercy is pleading,
Bidding his children draw nigh unto him.

Shall we, then, think of our toils and privations?
Shall we remember brief seasons of pain?
Shall we remember our selfish vexations?
And in his presence be sad and complain?

Nay rather, on wings of grateful thanksgiving,
Up to the regions of light we will soar:
While we are kept in the land of the living,
We our preserver will gladly adore.

May he direct us in paths of devotion;
May he preserve us from sin and from strife:
And may his love like an infinite ocean
Fill us with blessing and fulness of life.

SERMONS-WORTH READING

HELPFUL DISCOURSES for the PEOPLE

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN'S DUTY.

Sermon by Rev. J. B. Hawthorne, D. D., Atlanta, Ga. Text: I. Peter 2: 13: "Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake."

TO that native love of freedom which is universal among men, no word is more offensive than slave. With that word is associated all that is most revolting in tyranny and cruel torture. But notwithstanding this fact, the apostles gloried in the use of it when they described their relationship to God and Christ. In King James' version of the New Testament, the Greek word for slave is translated "servant," but all the great scholars of our day contend that servant does not express the full force of the original word. In the beginning of his second epistle, Peter proclaims to the world that he is the slave of Jesus Christ. Paul does the same thing again and again, and every time in the spirit of exultation.

In using this most hateful of words to express their relation to the Sovereign of the universe, these apostles of our Christ did not mean to endorse the institution of slavery as it then existed among the nations of the earth. While they recognized the existence of slavery as a civil institution, and encouraged obedience to the civil laws which protected and regulated it, they knew they were teaching religious doctrines which were destined to exterminate it from the face of the globe.

Why then did they rejoice in calling themselves "Slaves of God?" They did it for the very obvious reason that no other word in the Greek language would so well serve their purpose in emphasizing the absoluteness of Christ's authority over his people. When these inspired men call Christians "slaves," they mean to say that the rule of Christ is nothing less than a divine despotism.

Such language startles the generality of men. It is for this reason that we use it. It is for this reason that the spirit of God inspired these apostles to use it. The most of men need to be startled before they will thoughtfully and seriously consider who Christ is, what he offers to do for men, and what he demands that they shall do for him. Christ and his apostles were reformers, and all great and successful reformers are given to intensity of speech. It indicates clearness of conception, depth of conviction, and honesty, and singleness of purpose. The soft speech and mild manners of the average preacher of this time-serving generation are incompatible with the spirit and purposes of the Gospel. "These are they who turn the world upside-down," will always be true of that class of preachers who take Christ and his apostles for their models. It is not expected that one of our latter-day ecclesiastical dudes, who is hired to prophesy smooth things, to a congregation of wine-bibbers, round-dancers, and club-house sensualists, will ever startle his flock by a manly proclamation and endorsement of the doctrine, that all true Christians are the slaves of Jesus Christ. Such fidelity is expected only of the unpurchased and unpurchasable element of the Christian ministry.

You call Christ Lord and Master, but do you realize the full significance of these words? To call him Master is to confess that he owns you, and that it is his right to rule you in all things. Is your submission a reality of your daily life, or a mere empty expression of your lips? Do you report to him every morning for orders, saying, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" and when night comes, and you fold your arms for sleep, do you look up into his face and say, "My Master, I have tried to do thy will?"

The most of men would accept Christ as a Saviour if they could do it without submitting to him as a Master. But this is an impossibility. Submission must precede salvation. Paul's sins were not washed away until he has fallen before the risen and exalted Christ and cried, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" The Incarnate Son of God was named Jesus because he should save his people from their sins. You may be very willing to be saved in your sins, but very unwilling to be saved from your sins. You will accept salvation if it can be done without forsaking a life of sinful indulgence. You will take Christ as a Redeemer—a refuge from the coming wrath of God—but not as a King.

Wanted—a church in which a man can be recognized as a Christian, and be ready for heaven when he dies, without absolute submission to Jesus Christ. This is the unadvertised desire of the majority of men and women in this country. We need not to be told that such people can very readily find churches which profess to be able to accommodate their wishes. The worst old beer-bloated and vice-eaten lepers in this country are holding membership in some church, under the satanic delusion that the Divine Master, whom they have refused to serve, will open to them the gates of glory when they die. The minister who can stand and witness these disgraceful travesties upon Christian living, and utter no word of reprobation or warning, is as unworthy of the pulpit as he is unfit for the heaven of Christian heroes and martyrs.

One of the most offensive features of Christ's government to the unspiritual mind, is the law which requires us to submit to every ordinance of man. In this commandment God seems to identify himself with all human government, even to the extent of supporting what is wrong and despotic. "Submit yourself to every ordinance of man." If the State of Georgia should require me to paint my house red, or to wear a certain kind of hat, or to eat nothing but corn-bread and bacon, would the Word of God require me to submit to such a law? Yes. If the State of Georgia should require me to keep on my premises a certain number of cats and dogs of the most degenerate breed, would the Word of God require me to submit to such legislation? Verily, it would. "Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man."

But in requiring us to submit to all civil legislation, God does not mean that all such legislation is wise and just. Nor does he mean to forbid us to make every reasonable endeavor to abolish it. Christianity recognizes the fallibility of human government. Its Divine author knew that they would always be more or less corrupt.

There are about nine hundred bar-rooms in Georgia. They have a legal right to exist, and Christianity binds me to respect that right. To intimidate the keeper of one of these dens, by threatening violence to his person, or injury to his property, would be not only unpatriotic, but un-Christian. But while the Christian religion requires me to submit even to the most unrighteous civil enactment, it does not forbid me to condemn it. It does not forbid me to generate a sentiment in favor of its repeal. It makes it my solemn duty to do this. Not to do it would be insubordination to Christ. By all that the incarnate Son of God taught in person and through men whom he commissioned and inspired to reveal his will; by the sinless life he lived; by the nameless agony he endured; by every drop of blood he shed for my salvation and the redemption of my fellowmen; and by every vow of fealty to a cause to which I have professed to consecrate my life, I am bound to identify myself with the virtuous and patriotic citizenship of Georgia which is calling upon our State legislature to exterminate the bar-room curse.

The organic civil law of our commonwealth guarantees to every person charged with the commission of crime, the right of trial by jury. To deprive any man of that right is not only disloyalty to the State, but a crime against God. Where there is a civil government there can be no justification of mob-violence in any form; and the man who will not support the State in suppressing and punishing white-cappers and lynchers, is wilfully disobedient to the divine command which requires him to submit to every ordinance of man.

While we are inviting the world to come hither and see the progress we have made along material lines, we ought to be maturing some plan by which we may educate our people away from the disgraceful habit of hanging men in defiance of civil authority.

More lynchings take place in Georgia in one year than occur in Germany in forty years. I know that the crimes which pro-

"Daubrey" at $1.50

In addition to the above names—"Empress," "Marcell" and "Daubrey,"—each pair of the genuine gloves bears the name of "Strawbridge & Clothier." No matter what the price may be there are no gloves better than those bearing our "Daubrey" stamp. Taking almost the entire production of one glove-maker brings the prices to us down to considerably less than other retailers have to pay—an advantage which we share with you. Money refunded if the gloves are not satisfactory.

An illustrated catalogue of gloves sent to any address upon request.

voke our people to these unlawful executions are exceptionally black and revolting. I know that courts move slowly, and that justice is too long delayed. But these facts are no warrants for a reign of mobocracy, even for a single day or a single hour.

"Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake, whether it be to the king as supreme, or unto governors as unto them that are sent by him for the punishment of evil-doers, and for the praise of them that do well. For so is the will of God." It is not difficult to understand these words. Uphold the government to which you look for the protection of your own life and property. Do not yourselves undertake the punishment of evil-doers, but leave that to those who have that authority of law.

There are more murders in Fulton county in one year, than occur among the same number of people in England in five years. The explanation of this is that, in England if a man is insulted or wronged in person or property, he appeals to the courts and they punish the offender, while here, if a man is only insulted, he jerks a pistol from his hip-pocket and punishes the offender by shooting the life out of him. Such conduct is unreasonable, unpatriotic, unmanly, barbarous and inhuman. The frequency of it in this country shows that in the most essential element of civilization we are a hundred years behind some other countries.

Great efforts are being made to encourage emigration in this direction. We are advertising on a prodigious scale the advantages of our climate and soil, and the vastness of our undeveloped mineral wealth. But if our newspapers, pulpits, and lyceums, would combine to support our government in an effort to abolish "the pistol in the hip-pocket," they would accomplish more in bringing desirable emigrants to our section than is done by all the agencies which are scattering information concerning our climate, soil and minerals. The shortest method of removing this fearful disgrace, which is keeping back the material development we so much covet, is to confess the whole truth about it, and then say to our civil authorities, "You shall have our united and unflinching support in the passage and enforcement of such laws as are needed to abolish this curse."

From the beginning of his ministry the fealty of Jesus to the civil government was discredited. Enemies of his religion were zealous in trying to make it appear that he was unfriendly to Cæsar; but when they put to him the question, "Is it lawful to give tribute unto Cæsar?" he replied, "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's."

A distinguished writer says, "It was a favorite charge against the early Christians that they were plotting the overthrow of the Empire, and the dethronement of Cæsar in favor of 'one Jesus.' Their private meetings were supposed to be convened for unlawful political purposes. It was therefore necessary that men's minds should be disabused of the impression that any violence subversive of existing society was contemplated." This will account for the many passages in the writings of the apostles urging Christians to respect and obey the powers that be. So consistent was the conduct of the members of the early Churches in this respect, that Pliny admitted in his letter to the Emperor Trajan, that he found no cause of blame in them except "a perverse and extravagant superstition."

"Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man." Of course there are limits to the application of these words. God does not mean that we must submit to any violation of the rights of conscience. The apostles, who were the first to advocate obedience to existing authority, were also the first to exclaim, when that authority invaded the realm of conscience, "We must obey God rather than men." Jesus Christ had commissioned these men to preach his Gospel. Their consciences required them to obey that commission, and they did obey it in defiance of mobs, courts, governors, kings, and emperors.

In concluding this discussion, I would impress upon your minds the sacred and lofty motive set before us in the text: "For the Lord's sake." "Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake."

What is it that a true man will not do and suffer for the sake of his friends? See Pythias mounting the scaffold and rejoicing in the privilege of dying as a substitute for his friend Damon.

What obligation too great for the patriarch to lay upon his country's altar? See Marcus Curtius mount his war horse, and with the hope of closing the chasm in the Roman forum, ride headlong into the yawning abyss.

If for the sake of friends, or country, or mother, we would struggle, sacrifice and suffer, what should be our feeling when we hear the voice of him in whom we live, move and have our being, and through whom we have redemption from sin and death and hell, saying, "Do this for my sake!"

Brother, go in imagination and sit with your loving Lord at that last supper, and look into that sweet, sad face, and hear his words of counsel and benediction; follow him to the garden where he will grapple with that mysterious vision, and sweat as it were great drops of blood; go back with him into the city, and see him condemned, crowned with mock royalty, buffetted and spit upon; pursue him to the place of execution; sit down before his cross and see him die, the just for the unjust; then let your thoughts dwell upon him as the risen and exalted Prince and Saviour, giving us repentance and remission of sins, and preparing for us an eternal heritage of beauty and bliss, and I know that you will be constrained to throw yourself at his feet and say:

My gracious Lord, I own thy right,
To every service I can pay,
And call it my supreme delight,
To hear thy dictates and obey.

An Asthma Cure at Last.

Medical Science at last reports a positive cure for Asthma in the remarkable Kola Plant, a new botanical discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa. Its cures are really marvelous. Rev. J. L. Combs, of Martinsburg, W. Va., writes that it cured him of Asthma of fifty years standing, and Hon. L. G. Clute, of Greeley, Iowa, testifies that for three years he had to sleep propped up in a chair, being unable to lie down night or day from Asthma. The Kola Plant cured him at once. To make the matter sure, these and hundreds of other cures are sworn to under oath before a notary public. So great is their faith in its [illegible] that the Kola Importing Co., [illegible] Broadway, New York, is sending out large trial cases of the Kola compound free to all sufferers from Asthma. Send them your name and address on a postal card, and they will send you a large trial case by mail free. It costs you nothing and you should surely try it.

Are You Open to Conviction?

Our advertisements have proved convincing to thousands upon thousands of fair-minded men and women, representing every walk of life—clergymen, lawyers, doctors, teachers and business men have been open to conviction, and now endorse BOOTH'S Hyomei, the Australian "dry-air" treatment of Asthma, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Coughs, Colds, Etc.

HON. F. H. WILSON,
Member of Congress from Brooklyn, says:
Temple Court, New York City,
November 26, 1894

My Dear Mr. Wyckoff: On your suggestion, I procured from your friend, Mr. Booth, one of his pocket inhalers. It has worked like a charm. The bronchitis has entirely disappeared, and, thanks to you, is the first thing I have found in ten years that has given permanent relief. There is certainly a great field here for a remedy having such merit. Cordially yours,
F. H. WILSON.

[The above is to the late W. O. Wyckoff, Esq., President Remington Typewriter Co., from Hon. Francis H. Wilson, Member of Congress.]

DR. S. H. MORRIS,
Buffalo, N. Y., September 5th, 1894.

Dear Sir: In thirty years' experience in the practice of medicine I have never given my name in support of a proprietary remedy, for I never saw one that performed all, and more than was claimed for it, until I met with Hyomei, which I indorse with all my heart professional ethics to the contrary notwithstanding. I believe it a duty I owe to humanity. Since testing Hyomei in Laryngitis, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, Hay Fever, and last, but far from being least, Galloping Consumption in an advanced stage, which by use of Hyomei, with no other medicine, in four weeks was transformed into an assured recovery, I believe in it for itself, for what it has done.
S. H. MORRIS, M.D.,
159 Franklin Street.

REV. PETER STRYKER, D.D.,
Pastor 34th Street Reformed Church, writes:
326 West 33rd St., New York, Sept. 4, 1895.

MR. R. T. BOOTH:

Dear Sir: After using Hyomei for some two months, and observing its effects upon many others, I wish to give my testimony as to its merits. I have seen it used in cases of Asthma, Catarrh, and Bronchial affection, with wonderful relief, when other remedies had failed. In each case it gives promise of a speedy and permanent cure. Personally, I may add, it has been of great service to me in giving clearness and elasticity to my voice in speaking and singing.
Yours cordially,
REV. PETER STRYKER, D.D.

Are you afflicted and still skeptical? Send me your name and address, and my pamphlet, giving similar letters by the score, shall prove that Hyomei does heal and cure. Are you afflicted, but believe that Hyomei will help you? Don't delay—write to-day for consisting of pocket inhaler (made of decolorized hard rubber, beautifully polished), a bottle of Hyomei, a dropper, and full direction for using.

Hyomei [illegible] a purely vegetable antiseptic, and destroys the germs and microbes which cause [illegible] of the respiratory organs.

The air, thoroughly charged with Hyomei, is inhaled through the Pocket-Inhaler at the mouth, and, after permeating the minutest air-cells, is slowly exhaled through the nose. It is aromatic, delightful to inhale, inexpensive, and gives immediate relief. It stops all spasmodic coughing instantly, clears the voice, expands the lungs, and increases the breathing capacity. Consultation and trial treatment free at my office.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

{Spring No. 2.}

Nature's Great Remedy in Uric-Acid Diathesis. The Only Known Solvent of Stone in the Bladder—Its Value in Gout.

Case of Gov. THOMAS M. HOLT, of North Carolina.

Stated by Dr. E. C. LAIRD, Haw River, N. C.

Gov. Thomas M. Holt, of North Carolina, a patient with strongly marked Uric-Acid Diathesis, suffered frequent attacks of Nephritic Colic, and at the same time a severe Gouty affection. Except as to the usual treatment for the relief of present paroxysms, I put BUFFALO LITHIA WATER Spring No. 2, him exclusively upon which has been attended with happy and remarkable effect, both as to the Calculus and Gouty affection. Under its action he has at various times discharged large quantities of Calculi and Sand. The deposition of fine sand not infrequently exceeded a teaspoonful. Under microscopic examination it was evident that the Calculi were originally parts of larger formations which had been disintegrated by the action of the Water.

What Governor Holt Himself says:

"I do not at all doubt that BUFFALO LITHIA WATER which I my life was preserved by must regard as one of the most wonderful Waters of the World."

This Water is for sale by druggists generally, or in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles $5.00 f. o. b. at the Springs. Descriptive pamphlets sent free to any address.

and poultry. There are few more lucrative occupations than poultry raising—if rightly managed. The demand for choice poultry and fresh eggs constantly exceeds the supply. They are the steady source of pin-money to the women folks of many a family. Poultry raising is peculiarly a woman's work. Many of the best egg raisers in the world are women. Farm-Poultry teaches all women how to make money with a few hens. The men also, who are posted on the right management and care of poultry and its preparation for market; who know the secret of making hens lay early and of getting the greatest yield of eggs when prices rule highest, are making good profits. Such are the men and women who edit Farm-Poultry. They are actively engaged in raising poultry upon farms and in suburban towns. They have positive knowledge of the most profitable methods of feeding and caring for all kinds of fowls under all conditions. A CHRISTMAS CAROL.

A Sermon Preached by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., at Washington, D. C., on the Text: "Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem" Matt. 2: 1.

AT midnight from one of the galleries of the sky a chant broke. To an ordinary observer there was no reason for such a celestial demonstration. A poor man and wife — travelers, Joseph and Mary by name—had lodged in an outhouse of an unimportant village. The supreme hour of solemnity had passed, and upon the pallid forehead and cheek of Mary, God had set the dignity, the grandeur, the tenderness, the everlasting and divine significance of motherhood.

But such scenes had often occurred in Bethlehem, yet never before had a star been unfixed, or had a baton of light marshalled over the hills winged orchestra. If there had been such brilliant and mighty recognition at an advent in the House of Pharaoh, or at an advent in the House of Cæsar, or the House of Hapsburg, or the House of Stuart, we would not so much have wondered; but a barn seems too poor a centre for such delicate and archangelic circumference. The stage seems too small for so great an act, the music too grand for such unappreciative auditors, the window of the stable too rude to be serenaded by other worlds.

It is my joy to tell you what was born that night in the village barn; and as I want to make my discourse accumulative and climacteric, I begin, in the first place, by telling you that that night in the Bethlehem manger was born encouragement for all the poorly started. He had only two friends—they his parents. No satin-lined cradle, no delicate attentions, but straw, and the cattle, and the coarse joke and banter of the camel drivers. No wonder the mediæval painters represent the oxen as kneeling before the infant Jesus, for there were no men there at that time to worship. From the depths of that poverty he rose until to-day he is honored in all Christendom.

What name is mightiest to-day in Christendom? Jesus. Who has more friends on earth than any other being? Jesus. Before whom do the most thousands kneel in chapel and church and cathedral this hour? Jesus. From what depths of poverty to what height of renown! And so let all those who are poorly started remember that they cannot be more poorly born, or more disadvantageously, than this Christ. Let them look up to his example while they have time and eternity to imitate it.

Do you know that the vast majority of the world's deliverers had barnlike birthplaces? Luther, the emancipator of religion, born among the mines. Shakespeare, the [illegible] of literature, born in an [illegible] house at Stratford-on-Avon. Columbus, the discoverer of a world, born in poverty at Genoa. Hogarth, the discoverer of how to make art accumulative and administrative of virtue, born in an humble home in Westmoreland. Kitto and Prideaux, whose [illegible] ments in the Holy Scriptures which had never been entered, born in want. Yes, I have to tell you that nine out of ten of the world's deliverers were born in want.

I stir your holy ambitions to-day, and I want to tell you, although the whole world may be opposed to you, and inside and outside of your occupations or professions there may be those who would hinder your ascent, on your side and enlisted in your behalf are the sympathetic heart and the almighty arm of One who one Christmas night about eighteen hundred and ninety-five years ago was wrapped in swaddling clothes and laid in a manger. Oh, what magnificent encouragement for the poorly started!

Again, I have to tell you that in that village barn that night was born good will to men, whether you call it kindness, or forbearance or forgiveness, or geniality, or affection, or love. It was no sport of high heaven to send its favorite to that humiliation. It was sacrifice for a rebellious world. After the calamity in Paradise, not only did the ox begin to gore, and the adder to sting, and the elephant to smite with his tusk, and the lion to put to bad use tooth and paw, but under the very tree from which the forbidden fruit was plucked were hatched out war and revenge and malice and envy and jealousy and the whole brood of cockatrices.

But against that scene I set the Bethlehem manger, which says, "Bless rather than curse, endure rather than assault," and that Christmas night puts out vindictiveness. It says, "Sheathe your sword, dismount your guns, dismantle your batteries, turn the warship Constellation, that carries shot and shell into a grain ship to take food to famishing Ireland, hook your cavalry horses to the plow, use your deadly gunpower in blasting rocks and in patriotic celebration, stop your lawsuits, quit writing anonymous letters, extract the sting from your sarcasm, let your wit coruscate but never burn, drop all the harsh words out of your vocabulary — 'Good will to men.'"

"Oh," you say, "I can't exercise it; I won't exercise it until they apologize; I won't forgive them until they ask me to forgive them." You are no Christian then—I say you are no Christian, or you are a very inconsistent Christian. If you forgive not men their trespasses, how can you expect your Heavenly Father to forgive you? Forgive them if they ask your forgiveness, and forgive them anyhow. Shake hands all around. "Good-will to men."

Oh, my Lord Jesus, drop that spirit into all our hearts this Christmas time. I tell you what the world wants more than anything else—more helping hands, more sympathetic hearts, more kind words that never die, more disposition to give other people a ride, and to carry the heavy end of the load and give other people the light end, and to ascribe good motives instead of bad, and to find our happiness in making others happy.

Out of that Bethlehem crib let the bear and the lion eat straw like an ox. "Good-will to men." That principle will yet settle all controversies, and under it the world will keep on improving until there will be only two antagonists in all the earth, and they will side by side take the jubilant sleigh-ride intimated by the prophet when he said, "Holiness shall be on the bells of the horses."

Again, I remark that born that Christmas night in the village barn was sympathetic union with other worlds. From that supernatural grouping of the cloud banks over Bethlehem, and from the especial trains that ran down to the scene I find that our world is beautifully and gloriously and magnificently surrounded. The meteors are with us, for one of them ran to point down to the birth-place. The heavens are with us, because at the thought of our redemption they roll hosannas out of the midnight sky.

Oh, yes, I do not know but our world may be better surrounded than we have sometimes imagined; and when a child is born angels bring it, and when it dies angels take it, and when an old man bends under the weight of years angels uphold him, and when a heart breaks angels soothe it. Angels in the hospital to take care of the sick. Angels in the cemetery to watch our dead. Angels in the church ready to fly heavenward with the news of repentant souls. Angels above the world. Angels under the world. Angels all around the world.

Rub the dust of human imperfection out of your eyes, and look into the heavens and see angels of pity, angels of mercy, angels of pardon, angels of help, angels crowned, angels charioted. The world defended by angels, girdled by angels, cohorted by angels—clouds of angels. Hear David cry out, "The chariots of God are twenty thousand. Even thousands of angels." But the mightiest angel stood not that night in the clouds over Bethlehem; the mightiest angel that night lay among the cattle—the Angel of the new covenant.

As the clean white linen was being wrapped around the little form of that Child Emperor, not a cherub, not a seraph, not an angel, not a world but wept and thrilled and shouted. Oh, yes, our world has plenty of sympathizers! Our world is only a silver rung of a great ladder at the top of which is our Father's house. No more stellar solitariness for our world, no other friendless planets spun out into space to freeze, but a world in the bosom of divine maternity. A star harnessed to a manger.

Again, I remark that that night born in that village barn was the offender's hope. Some sermonizers may say I ought to have projected this thought at the beginning of the sermon. Oh, no! I wanted you to rise toward it. I wanted you to examine the cornelians and the jaspers and the crystals before I showed you the Kohinoor—the crown jewel of the ages. Oh, that jewel had a very poor setting! The cub of bear is born amid the grand old pillars of the forest, the whelp of lion takes its first step from the jungle of luxuriant leaf and wild flower, the kid of goat is born in cavern chandeliered with stalactite and pillared with stalagmite. Christ was born in a bare barn.

Yet that nativity was the offender's hope. Over the door of heaven are written these words: "None but the sinless may enter here." "Oh, horror," you say, "that shuts us all out!" No. Christ came to the world in one door, and he departed through another door. He came through the door of the manger, and he departed through the door of the sepulchre, and his one business was so to wash away our sin that after we are dead there will be no more sin about us than about the eternal God. I know that is putting it strongly, but that is what I understand by full remission. All erased, all washed away, all scoured out, all gone. That undergirding and overarching and irradiating and imparadising possibility for you, and for me, and for the whole race, that was given that Christmas night.

Do you wonder we bring flowers to-day to celebrate such an event? Do you wonder that we take organ and youthful voice and queenly soloist to celebrate it? Do you wonder that Raphael and Rubens and Titian and Giotto and Ghirlandajo, and all the old Italian and German painters gave the mightiest stroke of their genius to sketch the Madonna, Mary and her boy?

Oh! now I see what the manger was. Not so high the gilded and jewelled and embroidered cradle of the Henrys of England, or the Louis of France, or the Fredericks of Prussia. Now I find out that that Bethlehem crib fed not so much the oxen of the stall as the white horses of Apocalyptic vision. Now I find the swaddling clothes enlarging and emblazoning into an imperial robe for a conqueror. Now I find that the star of that Christmas night was only the diamonded sandal of him who hath the moon under his feet. Now I come to understand that the music of that night was not a completed song, but only the stringing of the instruments for a great chorus of two worlds, the bass to be carried by earthly nations saved, and the soprano by kingdoms of glory won.

Oh, heaven, heaven, heaven! I shall meet you there. After all our imperfections are gone, I shall meet you there. I look out to-day, through the mists of years, through the fog that rises from the cold Jordan, through the wide open door of solid pearl to that reunion. I expect to see you there as certainly as I see you here. What a time we shall have in high converse, talking over sins pardoned, and sorrows comforted, and battles triumphant!

Some of your children have already gone, and though people passing along the street and seeing white crape on the door-bell may have said: "It is only a child," yet when the broken-hearted father came to solicit my service, he said: "Come around and comfort us, for we loved her so much."

What a Christmas morning it will make when those with whom you used to keep the holidays are all around you in heaven! Silver-haired old father young again, and mother who had so many aches and pains and decrepitudes well again, and all your brothers and sisters and the little ones. How glad they will be to see you! They have been waiting. The last time they saw your face it was covered with tears and distress, and pallid from long watching, and one of them I can imagine to-day, with one hand holding fast the shining gate, and the other hand swung out toward you, saying:

Steer this way, father, steer straight for me:
Here safe in heaven I am waiting for thee.

Oh those Bethlehem angels, when they went back after the concert that night over the hills, forgot to shut the door! All the secret is out. No more use of trying to hide from us the glories to come. It is too late to shut the gate. It is blocked wide open with hosannas marching this way, and hallelujahs marching that way. In the splendor of the anticipation I feel as if I was dying—not physically, for I never was more well—but in the transport of the Christmas transfiguration.

What almost unmans me is the thought that it is provided for such sinners as you and I have been. If it had been provided only for those who had always thought right, and spoken right, and acted right, you and I would have had no interest in it, had no share in it; you and I would have stuck to the raft mid-ocean, and let the ship sail by carrying perfect passengers from a perfect life on earth to a perfect life in heaven. But I have heard the Commander of that ship is the same great and glorious and sympathetic One who hushed the tempest around the boat on Galilee, and I have heard that all the passengers on the ship are sinners saved by grace. And so we hail the ship, and it bears down this way, and we come by the side of it and ask the Captain two questions: "Who art thou? and whence?" and he says: "I am Captain of Salvation, and I am from the manger." Oh, bright Christmas morning of my soul's delight! Chime all the bells. Merry Christmas!

Merry with the thought of sins forgiven, merry with the idea of sorrows comforted, merry with the raptures to come. Oh, lift that Christ from the manger and lay him down in all our hearts! We may not bring to him as costly a present as the Magi brought, but we bring to his feet and to the manger to-day the frankincense of our joy, the prostration of our worship.

Down at his feet, all churches, all ages, all earth, all heaven. Down at his feet the four-and-twenty elders on their faces. Down the "great multitude that no man can number." Down Michael, the archangel! Down all worlds at his feet and worship. "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will to men!"

A Truthful King.

IN one of his recent works, Rev. H. Clay Trumbull relates the following beautiful legend as illustrating the principle that a lie is never justifiable.

Viswamitra, the tempter and accuser, appears in the council of the gods, face to face with Indra. The question is raised by Indra, who is the most virtuous sovereign on earth. He then asks:

"What chief of mortals is there who has never told a lie?" Harischandra, king of Oude, is named as such a man. Viswamitra denies it. It is agreed (as in the testing of Job, according to the Bible story) that Viswamitra may employ any means whatsoever for the inducing of Harischandra to lie, unhindered by Indra or any other god.

First, Viswamitra induces Harischandra to become the custodian of a fabulous treasure, with a promise to deliver it up when called for. Then he brings him into such a strait that he must give up to Viswamitra all his possessions, including that treasure and his kingdom, in order to retain his personal virtue. After this, Viswamitra demands the return by Harischandra of the gold which has been already surrendered, claiming that its surrender was not according to the contract. In this emergency Viswamitra suggests, that if Harischandra will only deny that he owes this amount to his enemy the debt shall at once be canceled. "Such a declaration I can never make," says Harischandra. "I owe the gold and pay it I will."

From this time forward the efforts of Viswamitra are directed to the inducing of Harischandra to say that he is not in debt to his adversary; but in every trial Harischandra refuses to tell a lie. His only son dies in the desert. He and his wife are in poverty and sorrow; while all the time he is told that his kingdom and his treasures shall be restored to him, if he will tell only one lie. At last his wife is condemned to death on a false accusation, and he is appointed, by the sovereign of the land where she and he have been sold as slaves, to be her executioner. She calls on him to do his duty, and strike off her head.

Just then Viswamitra appears to him, saying: "Wicked man, spare her! Tell a lie even now, and be restored to your former state!"

Harischandra's answer is: "Even though thou didst offer to me the throne of Indra, I would not tell a lie." And to his wife, Chandravati, he said encouragingly: "This keen saber will do its duty. Thou dead, thy husband dies too—this self-same sword shall pierce my breast. . . . Yes, let all men perish, let the stars that shine above grow dim, let all seas be dried up, let all mountains be leveled to the ground, let wars rage, blood flow in streams, let millions of millions of Harischandras be thus persecuted; yet let truth be maintained, let truth ride victorious over all, let truth be the light,—truth alone the lasting solace of mortals and immortals."

As Harischandra strikes at the neck of Chandravati, "the sword, instead of harming her, is transformed into a necklace of pearls, which winds itself around her. The gods of heaven, all sages, and all kings, appear suddenly to the view of Harischandra, and Siva, the first of the gods, commends him for his fidelity to truth, and tells him that his dead son shall be brought again to life, and his kingdom and treasures and honors shall be restored to him. And thus the story of Harischandra stands as a rebuke to the Christian philosopher who could suppose that God, or the angels, would co-work with a man who acted on the supposition that there is such an anomaly in the universe as "a lie of necessity."

PILGRIMS TO BETHLEHEM.

Strangers from All Lands Assembling in David's City on Christmas Week—A Scene Before Bethlehem.

TRAVELERS who have visited Bethlehem, during the season of the Christmas celebration, have been struck with amazement at the vast concourse of pilgrims gathered there from all parts of the world. For many centuries, the scenes in and around the City of David in Christmas week have been such as to awaken the religious feelings and thrill the hearts of the multitudes who assemble there. A very large proportion come as genuine worshipers, drawn thither by a sacred and holy purpose; others come in fulfilment of a solemn vow, and still others drift in with the great tide of pilgrims as mere curiosity seekers.

For days before the Christmas festival, the highways leading to Bethlehem are crowded with these pilgrims. Between Jerusalem and David's city is a carriageway, about five miles in length, and it is crowded with the stream of travel. Bearded pilgrims from Russia and the Caucasus on foot, Greeks with swarthy faces, dusky Arabs on camels, Europeans and a sprinkling of Americans in carriages, strange-looking men from India, Persia and the remote parts of Asia, are all found in the throng that is moving to the city of the Nativity. Here and there may be seen a Moslem official, mingling with the crowd. Across that same highway in olden times, passed the armies of the Crusaders. Soon the little city is crowded to excess and as there is but one hotel, the accommodations afforded by the hospitable monastery and the private houses are soon exhausted. Many of the travelers find a temporary shelter in the spacious great square, and others (and probably the larger number) return to Jerusalem where there are usually ample accommodations. Some of the hardier sort camp outside Bethlehem by the roadside or on the open plain.

GIPSIES CAMPED OUTSIDE THE BETHLEHEM GATE.

(Photographed for "The Christian Herald.")

Between the Church of the Nativity and the hotel, however, in the great square, is the scene which, outside of the actual celebration, possesses most interest for the stranger. This square is filled with people in holiday attire, and even the roofs of the buildings that overlook it are crowded. On many of these roofs there is room for a considerable party. Below are the throngs of gayly-dressed men and women, the contrast between the white veils worn by the women of the Orient and the bright-colored coats and turbans of the men, making a vivid picture. Immediately outside the city gate may be seen the tents of gypsies who like the others have come to Bethlehem, but for the purpose of gain alone. In a corner of the market-place one can descry a shepherd with a string of lambs for sale, and in another, a group of kneeling camels, relieved of their loads.

New arrivals constantly pour into the already overcrowded square. Such a scene might have been witnessed on that occasion, nearly 1900 years ago, when the Roman mandate brought the scattered people of Palestine home to their respective birth-places, and "all the world" was to be taxed. There were such crowds in the khans, around Bethlehem, that there was "no room at the inn" for the two weary and traveled-stained strangers who arrived from Nazareth. And when, at the birth of Jesus, the wondrous star shed its refulgence over David's City, and guided the wise men to the manger-cradle of "David's greater Son," the little Judæan town was still full of strangers who had come to be taxed.

Along the highway leading from Jerusalem to the Bethlehem gate came the Magi, three eastern princes, whose names tradition has preserved as Melchior, Balthasar and Caspar. From the farthest East they had been guided by the marvelous star. In their own land, ever since the days of Seth, their progenitor, the prophecy of the appearance of this great luminous star, as the precursor of the Messiah, had been cherished and handed down from father to son through many generations. That prophecy, the tradition declares, was written by Seth in a book. In all the intervening years, twelve wise men had been chosen who should watch the heavens for the appearance of this star, and when one of their number died, another was selected to fill his place. Year after year, those Magi scanned the heavens from a great mountain-top, and at last after many generations had passed, the star appeared, and they followed it for two years until it rested over the little white-walled town on the slope of the blue Judæan hills.

While the whole world knows the story of the Magi, it is only in Bethlehem that one hears most fully of their sacred quest. The towns-people of the place relate a very beautiful legend, which says that Caspar and his companions, having reached the plains of Judæa, and finding the star apparently stationary, made certain in their own minds that the city of Jerusalem was the locality divinely indicated and hence concluded to relax their vigilance. After two years of arduous travel, their search seemed to be happily ended. So, halting with their camels, they rested with minds at ease and no longer kept watch on the heavens. Presently, to their amazement and sorrow, they found that the bright monitor had vanished from the sky, and they sincerely repented that they had been guilty of carelessness in trusting to their own judgment, rather than implicitly accepting its guidance to the end of their journey. Taking counsel together, they prayed that the Lord might restore to them their lost guide, that they might follow its leadings in humble obedience. They halted while yet some distance from Jerusalem, and rested at a well in the plain, which local tradition still indicates as the "Well of the Magi." Gazing into its cool depths, they were overjoyed to find, reflected on its smooth surface, the Star, which, though it had become for a time invisible to their eyes, was still shining brightly overhead. Raising their eyes once more heavenward, they saw it shining more resplendent than ever; and, led by its rays, they continued their journey until they laid their treasures at the feet of the Babe in the lowly Manger at Bethlehem.

Lost in Sight of Home.

Some fourteen years ago, in Canada, there was a young lady whose custom it was to spend her winter nights at balls. She had gone one night to a ball six or seven miles from home, and her parents did not expect her to return that night. When the ball was over, she took it into her head to go home unaccompanied. They tried to dissuade her, but it was no use, and, to make matters worse, there was an awful snowstorm. The next morning, when her mother looked out of the window, she fancied she saw an object upon the snow some distance from the garden gate. She rang the bell, summoned up the servant, and said, "I think some poor traveler has missed his track during the night, and if he stays there he will succumb to the intense cold." They went out and brought the object in, when the mother found it was the lifeless body of her darling child. The snow around showed there had been a struggle, and she had got within 150 yards of her home, and there perished. How many there are who get within sight of the home of Christ's kingdom, and yet some sinful indulgence keeps them back! "Almost, yet lost!"

The Forerunner.

S. S. Lesson for Jan. 5. Luke 1: 5-17. Golden Text: Luke 1: 76. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

IN the days when God was about to send his Son, born of a woman, to be the Saviour of this lost world, there was among God's hidden people a very definite expectation that the Messiah was at hand. It had been revealed to aged Simeon, by the Holy Ghost, "that he should not see death before he had seen the Lord's Christ" (Luke 2: 26); Anna, the aged prophetess, was acquainted with a little band in Jerusalem which "looked for redemption" (v. 38). When later on, John the Baptist began to preach, "the people were in expectation" (or suspense), with the question constantly before them, "Is this unusual man, whose preaching has such power and such results, the Messiah for whom we are looking?" The worldly were as worldly as ever, and the unconverted theologians, who studied and expounded the Word of God, still "knew not the Scriptures nor the power of God" (Matt. 22: 29); the hypocrites who did all their works "to be seen of men," abounded, but among them all there were standing upon God's watch-tower, waiting for what he should say to them (Heb. 2: 1), and for what he was about to do, some who did know the Scriptures, and the power of God. Of this minority were who were not only of the family of Aaron, but were children of the living God; "both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord, blameless." Free from an evil conscience, they were at liberty from themselves to bear the burden of the Lord, and his cause lay strong upon them. When it fell to the lot of Zacharias to execute the priest's office in the order of his course, the old man took to heart with the deep intensity of one who had comprehension of the times in which he lived this opportunity to draw near to God. Probably it was the first and last time in his whole life that it fell to him to burn incense upon the golden altar. How far in that supreme moment, when only the veil separated him from the cloud of God's presence, from which Moses had heard his voice speaking in the tabernacle, Zacharias could speak out the burden of his heart, we know not.

Zacharias and Elizabeth,

While many then may perhaps have prayed, as many do now "Come Lord and tarry not," and similar things which implified that the Lord was delaying his coming, Zecharias saw that the unruly state of his people was delaying him, and he could not join them, and thus reproach his God. He saw his God ready and the coming of the Messiah hindered because there was not found a people prepared for the Lord. Who knows what took place in his heart before the sudden appearance of an angel of the Lord standing on the right hand of the altar of incense. The old priest was troubled; did this messenger from heaven, the first who was ever known to appear in the temple, sent to speak of the judgment which the unreality of priests and people merited? He was not kept long in suspense: "Fear not, Zacharias, for thy prayer is heard, thy wife Elizabeth shall bear a son and thou shalt call his name John." It was too much. Used through long years to darkness, the eyes of faith were always intended for that light. That his prayer of years was heard, and that the instrument was to be a son miraculously born in his old age! It seemed so impossible. It involved him in an unexpected step of faith. He looked back upon himself and doubted.

The tension of the long waiting had been very great. He had sighed and groaned, and prayed that the children of Israel might be "turned to the Lord their God;" he had prayed that "Elijah which was for to come," might appear, "to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord;" but perhaps he had thought it would come about in a very different way. Let us learn to be pliable, willing to give up any preconceived notion, so that if our Lord's coming may be other than we have imagined, we may yet be found ready. Zacharias himself needed to be made ready, and the angel answered him, "I am Gabriel that stand in the presence of God; and am sent to speak unto thee, and to show thee these glad tidings. And behold, thou shalt be dumb and not able to speak, until the day that these things shall be performed, because thou believest not my words."

How little Zacharias knew of the unbelief which lurked in his heart! He had been faithfully and really looking for his Lord, and yet was taken by surprise, and unprepared for the announcement of Gabriel, because it made demands upon his faith which touched his own person. Are we so really waiting upon our God and looking for our Lord that nothing will take us by surprise? When, six months later, the same Gabriel took the wondrous message to Mary that the Christ should be born of her, she asked no confirmation of Gabriel's words, when he told her that the Holy Ghost should come upon her and the power of the Highest overshadow her, and that the Son of God should be born of her, for "with God nothing should be impossible," or R. V., "No word from God shall be void of power." Mary believed that with God to say is to do, and instantly and absolutely she surrendered herself to God; "Behold the handmaid of the Lord. Be it unto me according to thy Word."

Great things were to take place on this earth of ours during the next year, but only few were aware of what was about to happen. The promised son was born to the aged priest. But before this time, Mary and Elizabeth, the mother of the Messiah, and the mother of his forerunner, met together and strengthened one another in the Lord, by the deepest adoration, and praising God that he had counted them worthy to be his instruments at such an hour of the world's history. In the counsels of the Lord those two women of Israel ranked as more honorable, and more important for the destinies of man than Augustus Cæsar on the throne of the world's empire. No ovation of successful Roman emperors would have found an echo in the court of heaven, but the song of Elizabeth and the song of Mary (Luke 1: 22-55) make part of the living Word of our God, and we can believe that it thrilled through heaven as it was spoken.

The angel said of John: "Many shall rejoice at his birth," and the prophecy was fulfilled; his mother's neighbors and cousins heard how the Lord had showed great mercy upon her; and they rejoiced with her. It was otherwise when Jesus was born in the stable at Bethlehem. Eight days after the birth of John, when they came to circumcise the child, the friends gave him his father's name. But the mother knew the secret of the Lord, and said, "Not so, he shall be called John." The matter was referred to his dumb father, who wrote, "His name is John," and immediately the ban which Gabriel had laid upon his speech was removed; the old servant of God had learned his lesson in his enforced silence, and he spake and praised God. In the atmosphere of such a home, and then later in the solitude of the desert, John was prepared for the important work which lay before him. He "grew and waxed strong in spirit, and was in the deserts unto the day of his shewing unto Israel." Filled with the Holy Ghost himself, and imbued with a sense of his vocation by his parents, John had the true spirit and power of Elijah during his short life and brief ministry.

There is a general belief among Christians in this day that the coming of our Lord is near. There are, as no doubt there were in the days of Zacharias, many opinions afloat. Many may have argued that when he came it would be with majesty and power, bringing his saints with him, overturning the powers which be and setting on high his people Israel among the nations. But there were some, a little company, who understood that Israel must first acknowledge her iniquity, and that, before Christ could reign, he must suffer for our sins.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

BURNING INCENSE.

THE Gospel of Luke, from which the lessons for the next six months are taken, has many distinctive features of its own. The question of its authenticity has been exhaustively discussed in recent years, but no valid reason has appeared for doubting that it was written by the man whose name it bears. There is evidence that it was in general use in the churches throughout the world as early as the latter half of the second century, and was then accepted as genuine. Of Luke, himself, little is known. He does not appear to have been a disciple and it is doubtful whether he was a Jew. Tradition says that he was a Gentile physician of Troas, who was converted by the Apostle Paul. However that may be, it is evident from Paul's epistles and from the Acts of the Apostles (which is undoubtedly written by the same author as the Gospel), that Luke was his companion in some of his journeys and in his imprisonment. He derived the materials for his work, as he frankly states in his introduction (1: 1-4), from the immediate followers of the Lord, who were eye-witnesses of the events he records. He also, it would appear, had access to the narratives to which he refers. It seems certain, from several verbal peculiarities, that he had the Gospel of Mark before him when he wrote, and possibly that of Matthew also, but his work is much more exact as to dates and circumstances, than theirs and is more systematically arranged. It also contains much that is given by no other Evangelist. Among other matters for which we are indebted to Luke alone, there are no less than eleven parables, including those of the Good Samaritan and the Prodigal Son. Luke also describes six miracles not mentioned by any other writer. Many other events such as the annunciation to Mary, the vision of the Shepherds, the visit of Mary to Elizabeth and the finding of Christ in the Temple, we know of only through Luke's Gospel. The influence of the apostle Paul may be recognized here and there, as when he traces Christ's genealogy back to Adam, as the head of the whole race, while Matthew contented himself with tracing it to Abraham. That and other peculiarities confirm the tradition of his being a Gentile.

The events of the lesson are related only in his Gospel. It would appear that Zacharias was an ordinary priest, living quietly and inconspicuously in the Hebron region, and going up to Jerusalem twice a year with the other priests of his class to do a week's service in the Temple. There, on this momentous visit, he drew the lot to burn the incense. While engaged in the duty he sees a supernatural vision, and is informed that he is to have a son who shall fulfil the prophecy of the forerunner—the man who should go before the long-expected Messiah to prepare the people for his coming. His incredulity is reproved by a loss of speech, which he recovers after his son's birth, on giving his child the name appointed by the vision.

In the days of Herod. At first sight the days of a bad king would be the most unlikely time in which to expect the appearance of a very good and great man; but history shows that it has often happened. The very evils and dangers and wickedness of the time have the tendency to evoke heroism. A few illustrations which might be greatly multiplied are: Knox in the time of Mary, the wicked Queen of Scotland; Savonarola in the time of the infamous Pope, Alexander VI.; Coligny in the reign of Charles IX. of France; Ridley and Latimer in the bloody reign of Mary of England, and John Huss in the time of the ex-pirate Pope John. In the days of Herod, the king notorious for his evil life, appeared the greatest prophet of the Old Testament dispensation.

Walking in all the commandments . . . blameless. Among so much evil and corruption as there was at that time Zacharias and his wife were living a blameless life. Yet Zacharias went twice a year to Jerusalem weere the evil was greatest. It is possible for a child in a sinful home and a man in a factory of wicked men to live a pure life. An eminent writer says: "Strolling along the banks of the Columbia River, where there is a high rise and fall of the tide, I came at low water upon a spring of sweet, pure, fresh water clear as crystal gushing from between two rocks near the edge of the river. Twice a day the muddy water of the river rises above that beautiful fountain and covers it over, but there it is down under that soiled, salt stream sending out its purity and when the tide has passed, it is visible again, still pouring out its cold, fresh water as before. It has not ben polluted or defiled with the dirt above and around it.

While he executed the priest's office. Zacharias was attending to his ordinary duties when the messenger from God came to him. Young people are apt to think that they cannot serve God and cannot enjoy his notice and favor unless they are ministers or evangelists. It is a mistake; God can be served in any honest vocation, and more than once in the Bible story we are told of his call coming to a man while working at his trade. An eminent clergyman paid an unexpected visit to one of his people who was a miller. Not finding him at his house, he went to the mill, where he found the miller busy among the sacks of flour. The miller came forward to meet his visitor, apologizing for not shaking hands by showing them covered with flour. "Give me your hand," said the clergyman, "it is the hand of an honest man. When my Master calls me, may he find me, as I find you, engaged in duty."

Many . . . shall he turn to the Lord. There will come a time when that record will be the highest honor. Now we admire great soldiers, great orators, great financiers, but in eternity the man most honored will be the one who has turned many to the Lord. Sometimes this is done indirectly. It is a matter of history that one child's influence led to the conversion of her father and he was the means of saving many souls. Punshon, the famous Methodist preacher used to describe one remarkable chain of influence. He said: An unknown man wrote a tract that was the means of converting the famous Richard Baxter, who wrote a book that led to the conversion of many, and among them the eminent Philip Doddridge, whose book brought Wilberforce to Christ; Wilberforce's writing turned Legh Richmond to God, and Legh Richmond's work brought Thomas Chalmers to Christ.

Father Eliphalet.

"LIPH'S getting old!"

"Yes, he must be a good ten years older than Hiram, and Hiram's seventy odd."

The two old ladies with their knitting, sitting each beside her window in the sunny kitchen of the farmhouse, looked down the road. Their home was with a niece, and their place on the fringing edge of a country village, was one of a half-dozen farmsteads where life drowsed tranquilly on, just as if there were neither trolley cars, nor electric lights in the whole United States. Aunt Susy and Aunt Emmy were pretty well on in years themselves, one being seventy-five and the other seventy-three, but both felt quite young and spry; they had round rosy faces wrinkled a little like winter apples, and they spoke in brisk, crispy voices, and when they moved, stepped about with energy.

Eliphalet Jansen, passing the house, had lifted his hat to his old friends, and bowed in a courtly old-school fashion. He lived in his own house in the village itself, and a daughter and her family staid with him and made it a home. As one of the principal citizens and the most venerable inhabitant of the township, the dear old gentleman was called Father Eliphalet by the grown people, and grandfather by the children of the community. He was the real grandfather of a troop of sturdy boys and girls, but the fitness of things and his gentle and tolerant spirit had made the rest of the children adopt him for their own. It is a fine and noteworthy event in any set of human relationships, when one person is so lovable that everybody claims him or her, and regards life as happier because of the claim. The hoary head is indeed a crown of glory, when it is found in the way of righteousness.

As Grandfather Eliphalet wended his way homeward, the little blue-eyed tots, toddling before the doors, or the older ones playing on the sidewalk caught hold of his hand, and walked along with him a little way. One little ten-year-old girl, clad in the deepest black, in mourning for her mother, cried out:

"Hello, Grandfather Eliphalet. Are you coming to my house to play with me?"

"Not to-day, Madge," said the dear old gentleman, "but you may run and ask aunty to let you go home with me. Then we'll have luncheon, with roast apples and hot gingerbread. And afterward I'll tell you a long story. I'll walk on slowly and you can overtake me, if aunty says yes."

Madge presently caught up with him, and the child and the old man went on together.

As they reached the school-house, the scholars poured out for the noon recess. As the poet has it, they came "storming out to playing." In an instant Grandfather Liph was surrounded. Boys swarmed around him, girls lifted up their sweet faces and told him how their mothers were, and all about the presents their fathers had brought them from the market town some miles off, and I don't know what besides. Grandfather Liph had an ovation. Serenely smiling he went on his way, and soon Madge and he were at their journey's end.

"Lottie," said the old gentleman to his daughter a few days after, "do you know that next Thursday I'll be eighty-five years old? I mean to give a party, dear. I may not have another birthday this side of the river."

"Who will you invite? Grandfather Eliphalet is so popular the house won't hold all his friends, I'm afraid."

"I'll begin with the old survivors, daughter; the old people who were young when I was; there are only half a dozen left who call me Liph; and then I'll invite the middle-aged, the burden bearers, and when I've gotten through with them, I'll have in the children. A notice might as well be read out from the pulpit the Sunday before. That would be the easiest way to get hold of them all."

"Well, father dear," said Mrs. Evans, smiling fondly at him, "I can't make ice cream for the town, but I'll set to and we'll have pounds and pounds of homemade candy, and we've bushels of hickory nuts, and barrels of apples, and so we'll manage."

But Lottie Evans need not have worried about the question of refreshments. When the morning of her father's birthday arrived bright and early the neighbors bgan sending in their donations to the table. There were cooked hams and chickens, loaves of bread, pyramids of cookies, and great mounds of frosted cake. Every housewife sent her contribution, and an immense hamper came by express from a nephew who had gone away from home and made his fortune. It was packed with fruit, golden oranges, red-skinned sangerines, and fragrant bunches of grapes, both black and white, with yellow pears filling the interstices. Over all were laid masses of the loveliest pink and white roses. All the own grandchildren brought presents all day long, and the grandchildren by courtesy were not behind them, so that the house looked like a museum before night.

"We saw the Coyotes on the hill side."

"The best birthday I ever had," said Grandfather Liph, as he asked the minister to read. And the minister read, "With long life will I satisfy him and show him my salvation. Length of days is in her right hand; in her left hand are riches and honor. As thy days thy strength shall be," and many another golden text from that Word which is a treasury full of gold and gems, and in which one never seeks in vain for an amulet, a garland, an anodyne, a weapon, a tool, a bit of comfort, or healing for disease. After the reading, there was prayer, and the children sang, and so the old man's birthday came to its bright and genial close.

A year later, and a stranger passing through Father Eliphalet's village would have asked involuntarily, "What has happened here?" For every shop was closed, and every household seemed to be mourning for a bereavement. The school-house was shut, too, and the children stood in little, forlorn groups about the long street and at the corners. In Mrs. Evans' parlor lay a saint of God fast asleep. The open casket was covered with flowers, so that one saw only the lofty noble face, hushed in the great peace that passeth understanding. Neighbors dropped in, one by one, and children by twos and threes, and as they looked at the majestic form of the sleeper, they smiled, so lovely was his face in its perfect repose.

"I shall never be afraid to die," said Madge. "I saw mamma, and now I have seen Grandfather Liph, and I am sure an angel kissed them as they left the earth."

By-and-bye, a procession wound its way to the church. That, too, was a bower, for though flowers were not in season, everyone has brought the blossoms from his or her home window garden, and there violets and roses, and a great green palm branch ready to be laid on the coffin, when at last it was locked.

Yet, here was not one of earth's famous sons. Only an obscure and aged man, who had lived patiently, gently, and lovingly, who had been as a child among children, and had never done or said an indirect or mean thing or word in all his clean and upright life. But he had lived so as to be missed, and over him, as he lay at rest, they sang:

Servant of God, well done!

Surrounded by Wolves.

A Sunday School Missionary's Adventure on the Western Plains.

THERE are many sections, in remote parts of the Union, where the missionaries of the American Sunday School Union are doing excellent work that is rarely heard of by the outside world. In a recent letter from Mr. J. W. Armstrong, a missionary of the A. S. S. U. at Colfax, Wash., the writer says:

"Some time ago, wife and I made preparation to take a trip through a portion of country embracing Steptoe and Kamiak Buttes. We took a supply of provisions and bedding with us, so as to be prepared for camping out in case it was necessary. While we were in the vicinity of Kamiak Butte (or mountain), we visited the Sanders community and found the Sunday School in a very prosperous condition, and since I organized it, a very successful revival meeting had been held, which resulted in a church organization. The next day we came to Four Mile district, and while visiting that community, we found that there had been a revival held there also with marked results, terminating in a church organization and a prosperous Christian Endeavor Society. Their Sunday School is very large and doing a good work.

"From there we started on a trip in a northwesterly direction towards Steptoe Mountain, and on our way there visited a few homes in a sparsely settled community. Night overtook us, and there was no house in sight, except an abandoned dwelling, so we concluded we had better camp there for the night. So we got out our little oil stove, warmed up our lunch, spread a cloth on the ground, and after giving thanks, we enjoyed our evening meal. By this time, the shades of evening gathered round. All about us were the hills, in formation like the waves of the sea. From the crest of one of them came a sharp, shrill sound, and looking up, we saw a coyote (prairie wolf); then we saw another one farther down the hill, and still farther down, two smaller ones, so you can form some idea as to the music.

MISSIONARY J. W. ARMSTRONG.

My wife feared that the wild animals might overtake us and do us harm. However, we had a kind Providence watching over us, so we passed the night in safety.

"In the morning, we discovered that we were about midway between the two great Buttes, Steptoe and Kamiak, that stood in bold relief pointing upwards among the clouds. At the time our government engaged in a campaign against the Indians (in 1856 and later on), Colonel Edward J. Steptoe, commanding the United States troops, says, 'I was ordered to move forward and occupy the hill (Steptoe Butte), so we finally reached the hill near the summit, and the Indians having completely surrounded us (they outnumbered us five to one) we dismounted and picketed our horses on the summit, and posted our men around the crest, making them lie flat on the ground, as the Indians were threatening to charge the hill. This hill, mentioned in history, is now known as 'Steptoe Butte,' named after Colonel Steptoe. It is a treeless mountain. This butte is owned by Mr. James S. Davis, who makes it his home. The butte is round and runs to a point, and its elevation is 5,590 feet above sea-level, 1,700 feet above the level of the surrounding country. Chief Kamiakin, who fought against the government, frequently gathered his troops on this Butte Kamiak, and during a siege Chief Kamiakin was slain, and was buried on the butte.

In his letter, Mr. Armstrong adds:

"I send a portion of a letter written recently by one of our faithful superintendents of Walla Walla county: He says: 'We are very much encouraged with our Sunday School; it is on a steady increase. We have an attendance from seventy to seventy-eight, and a weekly prayer-meeting well attended. I shall never forget the time you came here three years ago and helped us with your warning and words of counsel, that if Sabbath desecration and infidelity and carelessness toward God were not given up, God's displeasure would rest upon us. Under difficulties you organized the school though small at first, see how it has increased. We still have no preaching, as the people are too poor to support a preacher, but the Lord is blessing our labors.'"

Bees that Became Robbers.

Buchner, a noted scientist, speaks of thievish bees which, in order to save themselves the trouble of working, attack well-stocked hives in masses, kill the sentinels and the inhabitants, rob the hives and carry off the provisions. After repeated enterprises of this description, they acquire a taste for robbery and violence; they recruit whole companies, which get more and more numerous, and finally they form regular colonies of brigand bees. But it is a still more curious fact that these brigand bees can be produced artificially by giving working bees a mixture of honey and brandy to drink. The bees soon acquire a taste for this beverage, which has the same disastrous effects, upon them as upon men; they become ill-disposed and irritable, and lose all desire to work, and finally, when they begin to feel hungry, they attack and plunder the well-supplied hives. There is one variety of bees—the sphecodes — which lives exclusively upon plunder in preference to working for it.

Training German Preachers.

The Great Work that Originated in the Humble, Self-Denying Labors of a Country Tailor.

AN interesting and almost romantic story is told of the origin of the educational institution of which a picture appears on this page. It is now a college regularly constituted under the charge of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, and its history is related in the organ of that church, The Church at Home and Abroad. It appears from this statement that more than half a century ago the German emigrants who had settled in the West were almost without spiritual privileges. They were living in widely separated sections and had few opportunities of hearing the Gospel in their own language. The danger of their lapsing into religious indifference and even into practical infidelity, was obvious, but no organized effort was made to save them from the peril. It remained for a poor Dutch tailor to initiate the movement that was destined to evangelize the whole region. Adrian Van Vliet was a man of deep piety and considerable learning which he had acquired by a life of hard study. He had curtailed his hours of labor at his trade that he might cultivate his mind. His tailoring provided him with the necessaries of life, and Van Vliet cared for nothing more. He might have made a fortune in those days, but he preferred to give his time to reading and the acquisition of Latin, Greek, Hebrew and German. To Van Vliet, the spectacle of the vast multitude of German-speaking people living without worship and without spiritual teaching of any kind, was distressing. Why was no effort being made on their behalf? Van Vliet wasted no time in appeals or vain regrets, but leaving the tailor's bench, quietly set to work to reach them himself. It was not much that he could do but he would do what he could. He went from farm to farm and from village to village, teaching and preaching. The effects were soon visible in several regularly organized churches. But there were no German-speaking preachers for them. Van Vliet undertook the duty of providing them. He gathered into his home at Dubuque a few promising German lads of ordinary education and the grace of God in their hearts and set them studying theology under his guidance. The picture of this grand, quiet, self-reliant, self-helping Dutch tailor, becoming preacher and tutor for the sake of his neglected brethren, is one of true heroism worthy to live in history.

For twelve years Van Vliet carried on his work sustained only by his faith and his indomitable spirit. But churches were [illegible] stirred by a kindred spirit, eager to work for Christ and asking only to be taught and trained for the service. Years, exposure, and [illegible] began to tell on the noble worker. To his sorrow he found his strength decreasing just at the time that the demands of the work were increasing. In 1854 he found himself quite unequal to carry it forward alone any longer. But the need and the success of the modest attempt to meet it had been demonstrated too clearly to be ignored. The embryo college became a Presbyterian institution and, six years later, the general assembly assumed control of it. An eligible site at Dubuque was secured and the college building represented in the illustration was erected. It contains dormitories for forty students with lecture rooms, etc. It is an interesting fact that one of the chief professorial chairs is filled by Dr. Godfrey Moery who was one of Van Vliet's earliest pupils. Among the other professors are Dr. Adam McClelland formerly of Brooklyn, Rev. A. C. Krœsche and Dr. N. M. Steffens.

The school is admirably located in Dubuque, the centre of population for the western half of German-speaking people. But, better than that, it has a vast number within easy reach who belong to the Presbyterian Church. While the great mass of German immigrants is Lutheran, large numbers in this region are of sturdy reform stock. There is a call from this multitude, which the school is not able entirely to answer. Many fields are seeking organization, but not enough ministers can be prepared to supply this natural demand. With larger means a still greater work can be accomplished. As it is, there are in this western field, 77 ministers, 109 churches and 6,234 members. The school has been the chief instrumentality in securing these results.

Gospel Work in India.

FEW people are aware how stupendous is the task of giving the Gospel to the teeming millions of India. A humble Christian worker who recently went out there on business, was so deeply impressed by what he witnessed there of the spiritual darkness of the people that he gave himself up entirely to quietly teaching all the natives he could reach, independent of any missionary society. He reports that an immense amount of good may be done in this way. In a recent report of village work one worker says: "In the native State of Bhor there is not a witness for Christ! Although even the smallest of its villages has its two or three temples with numerous idols, a standing witness not only to their degradation, but of their own felt need, and of a seeking after God." The same report states that at Sirkoli, the cruel ceremony of the swinging-hook is practiced once a year in a modified form. In front of one of the temples is a pole twenty-five feet high, erected on a stone platform; a cross pole is balanced on the top and from one end of this cross pole the man is suspended, the other end being held down by a rope. At the performance in 1893, the Patel, or head of the village, an old and apparently feeble man was the victim; with some persuasion we got him to show us the healed wounds in his back. His son, now seven, when twelve years old, will be fitted to take his father's place, the honor being conserved in the family.

"The preceding two or three days are kept as a fast, and on the day of the ceremony the victim takes opiates, and his back is rubbed with a mixture of ashes and other material to numb the flesh. In this case the hook was put into the flesh of his back, and with a cloth around him he was suspended and swung round five times, throwing down pieces of colored dried cocoanut to the assemblage, who attach much virtue to them. When asked why he went through this painful ordeal, his reply was—'Because Shirksaie (the goddess) requires it.' At other places visited the same cruel ceremony is practised. At Chikli, where a lot of people assembled, curious to know our mission, they, too, listened for the first time to the Gospel."

Atlanta's Famous Preacher.

Dr. J. B. Hawthorne's Distinguished Career and his Services to the Causes of Religion, Temperance and Public Morality.

ONE of the best known preachers in the South is Dr. James Boardman Hawthorne, Pastor of the First Baptist Church of Atlanta, Ga., whose sermons have appeared from to time in this journal. Dr. Hawthorne's fame has spread everywhere, his foes having been as active as his friends in making him known. He is the kind of man about whom the public is never neutral—a positive element, with strong convictions and a most emphatic and forcible way of expressing them, that inevitably affects his hearers strongly, either in admiration or opposition. There is never any mistake about Dr. Hawthorne's attitude on any public question, after he has handled it; and when he has spoken his opponents may conclude that they know exactly the worst that can be said about them and their cause. There is nothing of what Emerson called "the mush of concession," about Dr. Hawthorne; neither wealth, nor influence, nor public opinion can avert his denunciation, if he is convinced that any man is identified with an unrighteous cause, or is concerned in any dishonest, immoral, or unpatriotic proceeding. He has the courage of his convictions and like one of the ancient Jewish prophets, he declares woe in the name of the Lord against sin in all its shapes and tempters in all their guises. But Dr. Hawthorne's preaching is not all denunciatory. No man appreciates more than he the power of love in the Gospel message or more tenderly assures the penitent of the infinite mercy of God.

REV. J. B HAWTHORNE, D.D.

Dr. Hawthorne is a native of Alabama. He was born in Wilcox county, May 16, 1837. His father, Rev. Kiddare Hawthorne, was a zealous, energetic Gospel preacher, who in the course of his ministry baptized over five thousand persons. The family on the father's side is of that combination of Scotch-Irish origin which has given to this country so many distinguished men in statesmanship, the bar, and the pulpit. The pioneers of the American branch of the family settled in North Carolina in 1750. There they lived until 1817, when Dr. Hawthorne's father removed to Alabama, taking with him as his wife Margaret Baggett, a daughter of one of South Carolina's most honored families. It was pioneer work in those days, for the Indians were active in the neighborhood, and the new settler was called upon to follow Gen. Jackson in his famous Seminole campaign. The future minister was sent to school at Oak Hill and Camden, Ala., after which he went to Howard College for a two years' course. It was then his intention to enter the legal profession, and after his graduation he read law with the firm of Chandler, Smith & Herndon at Mobile. He was admitted to the bar at the age of twenty, and at once took a prominent place as an eloquent and fearless advocate. One or two speeches before juries proved that he was a master of a clear, forcible, convincing style of oratory, which was likely to carry him to the front rank among the lawyers of the day.

Two years practice was, however, all the legal experience Dr. Hawthorne was destined to have. During a visit to Washington on legal business, he was brought under the power of the Spirit, and resolved there and then to devote his future life to the cause of Christ. He returned to Mobile, promptly wound up his affairs and returned to Howard College to take a theological course. He remained there until 1860, when he accepted an invitation to become pastor of the Baptist Church in Broad street, Mobile. He had barely settled there when he was called from the pulpit to camp. The cause which stirred the South through all its borders was not likely to appeal in vain to a nature so sensitive and so robust as that of Dr. Hawthorne. With fifty members of his church he joined the Southern armies as a private, but was afterward appointed Chaplain of the Twenty-fourth Alabama Regiment.

In the re-arrangement which went on all through the South after the war, Dr. Hawthorne settled at Selma. He was later induced to accept the invitation of the Franklin Square Church, of Baltimore, Md. After four years' successful labor there, the Broadway Baptist Church, of Louisville, Ky., called him to the pastorate, and in 1874, he was invited to become pastor of the Tabernacle Baptist Church, of New York. His work in this city was brief. The climate did not suit him and under the strain of unusually arduous labors his health broke down.

An illness prostrated him from which it was thought he could not recover. But God spared his life for years of usefulness. As soon as he was able to travel, he went South to breath his native air. He recovered slowly and soon resumed active pulpit labor. At Montgomery, Ala. and subsequently at Richmond, Va. he held pastorates and did valuable and successful work. In 1884 the First Baptist Church of Atlanta, Ga. invited him to become its pastor and there Dr. Hawthorne still is, ministering to a large and influential congregation. Dr. Hawthorne is a diligent student and has been a frequent contributor to the religious and secular press.

Prayer.

Suggestions on the Christian Endeavor Topic for the Week Beginning Jan. 5 Luke 18 : 1-14.

EVERY Christian has probably at some period of his life been troubled with difficulties and doubts about prayer. Our very faith in God, and our reverence for him, suggest such difficulties. If he is so wise as we believe him to be, will he change his course at our request? If he is so loving as we know him to be, will he not do all that we need without going to him with our petitions? The sailor who, in a crisis, when his life was in imminent peril, prayed for almost the first time, and made it a plea that he was not like the landsmen who were always troubling God, expressed a feeling that, in one form or another, has entered many minds. Yet the impulse to pray is so common that it seems instinctive. There come to all men, times of suspense, of ardent longing, of appalling fear, when having done all that human power can do, there is an impulse to seek the aid of divine power. That the impulse should not be suppressed, we may be quite sure, and perhaps the difficulties may be removed more satisfactorily by an appeal to the highest authority than by arguing about them. Jesus who knew the mind of God, "spake a parable to the end that men ought always to pray and not to faint." He thus taught that prayer was a duty as well as a privilege, and that we might hope for answers to prayer. Not only was there a mercenary ground for prayer, but God welcomed it, and was ready to give blessings in response to it. That teaching is to the Christian a sufficient authority for prayer. We may, however, undermine our intellectual difficulties by considering what prayer really is. It does not consist in petition only. It includes the idea of communion. Our relations to God are much like the relations of children to an earthly parent. We would not deem a child loving, or dutiful, or filial, if with access to his father continually, he never approached him, or spoke to him. Confession of shortcoming and thanks for benefits already received, render prayer a duty, even if no petition were offered. But answers to prayer are promised and we are encouraged to make our requests known to God. Indeed, Jesus went so far as to say that under certain conditions every prayer would be answered. "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you." Thus, when there is full and perfect accord between Christ and his people, they may be trusted to ask what they will, and they will ask nothing that he will not grant. So, then, we come back to the original question of faith. As the child in difficulty or sorrow, may go to his father with his trouble, so may the Christian carry his trial to God in full confidence for removal or for strength to bear it.

He will submit every request to the infinite wisdom of God. If he is in pain, or in trouble, he will be willing to bear it, and not urge its removal, if God in his wisdom deems it better for him to suffer than to be relieved. As it was in Paul's case, it may be a greater blessing for the man to discover that God's grace is sufficient for him, than for him to be relieved of suffering. He wants above all things the blessing of sanctification, and it may be that God sees that the only way to it in his case, is through suffering. Then the man, who is abiding in Christ will be grateful even for "the cross that raises him." To some there would be no greater calamity than to have their prayers answered. Nor must we suppose that answers to prayer necessarily involve God's changing his plans. His omniscience foresees the prayer and has provided its answer before ever it is uttered.

WHEN CHRISTMAS COMES.

WHEN Christmas comes,
The baby girl who scarce can speak,
The youth with bronzed and bearded cheek,
The aged, bent with weight of years,
The sorrow-stricken spent with tears,
The poor, the rich, the grave, the gay,
Who fare along life's rugged way,
Are glad of heart, when in the sky
The wondrous seraph wings sweep by,
When Christmas comes.

When Christmas comes,
The sailor on the seas afloat,
The traveler in lands remote,
The warrior by the campfire's light,
The courtier in the palace bright,
The student by the midnight lamp,
The miner deep in dust and damp,
Alike uplift, through riven skies,
The wondrous look of glad surprise,
When Christmas comes.

When Christmas comes,
In field and street, in mart and farm,
The world takes on a lovelier charm;
Sweet-scented boughs of pine and fir
Are brought, like frankincense and myrrh,
To make our hallowed places meet
For hands that clasp and tones that greet,
While hearts, worth more than gold or gem,
Go forth to find their Bethlehem,
When Christmas comes.

LET THE LORD MANAGE.

WHEN angels of sadness lead thee
To walk in a desolate land—
When all that was lovely and precious,
Has perished by death's smiting hand,
O, fly to the Lord in thy sorrow—
Thy refuge in trouble is he—
"Lean not to thine own understanding,"
But let the Lord manage for thee.

Chorus: O, cast all thy care upon Jesus,
And make his sure promise thy plea—
Thy Saviour will bear every burden of care—
Then let the Lord manage for thee.

When every fond purpose is thwarted—
When hopes have been dashed to the ground—
When thou art oppressed and desponding,
Not knowing where help shall be found,
Then turn to the Lord everlasting—
Thy hope and thy help he will be—
"Lean not to thine own understanding,"
But let the Lord manage for thee.

In life and in death he is with thee—
He knows the beginning and end
Of all that is dark and perplexing,
And he will make circumstance bend
To bring every soul that will trust him,
A blessing of highest degree—
Then lean not to thine understanding,
But let the Lord manage for thee.

THE TRUTH ABIDES.

THE truth that served the sires of old,
Serves now the children, too.
Throughout all time it may be told,
And still be ever new.

Its orb-like splendor filled the past,
And shall the future fill;
For in the mind of God 'twas cast,
And finished by his will.

Of God, it shall like him endure,
When time itself expires.
Yes, Lord! thy Word shall stand secure
'Mid nature's funeral fires.

That Word then, while the ages roll,
Shall be our guiding light;
Give hope and gladness to the soul,
To cheer earth's darkest night.

The Lord's Coming.

Its Prominence in the Scriptures and its Pertinence to Christian Life.

BY DR. GEO. F. PENTECOST.

NO single doctrine or event is so conspicuous or so frequently alluded to as that of the Lord's Second Coming. By ten to one is his second coming spoken of as compared with the references to his death. There are nearly, if not quite, one thousand promises and references to his second coming in the New Testament. This is vastly in excess of texts upon any other subject.

The doctrinal importance of our Lord's Second Coming can only be faintly appreciated when we say that every important doctrine in the Bible is taught and enforced in connection with this always imminent event. Morover, it is used by Christ and his apostles to urge every practical grace and duty on his disciples. This great truth runs through the entire New Testament from beginning to end, touching every doctrine binding every duty, arousing, consoling, directing, guiding, and inspiring the believer at every step of his pilgrimage. Wherever we turn, it arrests the eye; whatever the subject of inquiry, it engages the attention by its presence.

It is the blessed hope of the Church, and has been in all ages, and will be "till he come." Whatever we have lost of loved and precious treasure will come to us then: whatever of hope deferred in our life will be realized when "He comes;" whatever of spiritual perfection we have longed for will be realized when he "who is our life shall appear," for then "we shall be like him." Therefore, according to his own Word, we are to "look for and hasten the blessed hope, the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ."

Where is the promise of his coming? This is an old question, and curiously and sadly enough, though inspiration has recorded it as emanating from the scoffers of the last day, it is not unfrequently asked in something of a scoffing spirit by those who ought to be "watching and waiting" for their absent Lord. Beside all the Scriptures which underlie what has already been said, I will specify a few of the many hundred promises to be found scattered through the whole Bible.

The promises of Jesus: "Let not your heart be troubled . . . I will come again and receive you to myself." (John 14:1,3.) "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." (Rev. 22: 12, 20.) Besides, I would refer you to his great parables of the bridegroom; of a nobleman who took a long journey to receive a kingdom and return; of the talents and the pounds; and of the great prophecies of Matt. 24, 25; Luke 21 and Mark 13.

The declaration of the angels: "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye here gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."

For the teachings of the apostles, we refer you to every epistle in the New Testament, in the which the promises of his coming run like a golden thread binding all the truth of God together. We might say that this doctrine is the warp in which all apostolic teaching is woven.

The entire Book of Revelation, containing the last and final utterances of Christ, is concerning those things, "which must shortly come to pass," and all in connection with and dependent upon his coming. Beyond the third chapter, the whole book remains unfulfilled. His descent toward the earth in mid-heaven where he will receive his Church, "those who have fallen asleep in Jesus" and those "who remain" being "caught up together.

Let All Help Armenia.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD congratulates its friends everywhere on the prompt and generous responses that are being received in answer to its appeal for aid to the stricken people of Armenia. It is a splendid illustration of practical Christianity, which thus reaches out, across oceans and continents, to succor the thousands of homeless and destitute Christians of that unfortunate land. It is also a tribute to the constancy of the Armenian people, whose simple faith, preserved intact through generations of persecution, has now come to the time of sorest trial. Thousands have already perished with the name of the Saviour on their dying lips; thousands more are outlaws for his sake. At no time in this world's history has there been an emergency more strongly calculated to wake the warmest sympathy as well as the righteous indignation of Christ's followers, as that which now confronts them in Armenia—the ancient Eden—now deluged with the blood of her martyred sons and daughters who have died for the faith.

Much has already been done to mark the deep and wide-spread sympathy felt in our own land for the people of Armenia, but the real work of relief is just beginning. Half a million souls facing famine and starvation—such is the situation, as explained by the cablegrams, by the reports of Consular officials and by the corroborative testimonies of a large number of missionary workers. Money is needed, and quickly, to save precious lives. Our Relief Fund is now over $15,000, but in view of the fact that nearly half a million persons are facing starvation, much more money will be needed.

We urge all whose hearts have been touched by the woes of Armenia to join with us in this movement for the rescue of the suffering ones. It is a Christian service which should be welcomed by everyone who loves to do the service of the Master. These Armenians are hero-martyrs. By denying Christ, they can win life and prosperity; by rejecting Jesus and accepting Mohammed, they would be assured of Turkish friendship and protection. The trial through which their brothers, and sons, and daughters, have passed is awaiting them also. Christian America can and should strengthen and succor them now. Let the churches, the societies, the Sunday Schools and the circles for Christian work in every Christian denomination, help to save Armenia. No mite is so small, no gift so insignificant, that it Moslem cruelty. And let earnest prayers come with all the gifts, prayers that the Almighty arm may be outstretched to save Armenia from utter extermination, in a crisis when all Europe seems to have forsaken her to her fate. Whatever other nations may do, let our people take a stand for Armenia, and thus demonstrate to the world that we are a compassionate Christian nation.

The Coming Cold.

ONE-HALF of the industries of our day are employed in battling inclemency of the weather. The furs of the North, the cotton of the South, the flax of our own fields, the wool of our own flocks, the coal from our own mines, the wood from our own forests, all employed in battling these inclemencies, and still every December, with blue lips and chattering teeth, answers: "None of us can stand before his cold." Now, this being such a cold world, God sends out influences to warm it. I am glad that the God of the frost is the God of the heat; that the God of the snow is the God of the white blossom; that the God of December is the God of June. The question as to how we shall warm this world up is a question of immediate and all-encompassing practicality. In this zone and weather there are so many fireless heaths, so many broken window-panes, so many defective roofs that sift the snow. Coal and wood and flannels and thick coat are better for warming up such a place than tracts and Bibles and creeds. Kindle that fire where it has gone out. Wrap something around those shivering limbs. Shoe those bare feet. Hat that bare head. Coat that bare back. Sleeve that bare arm. Nearly all the pictures of Martha Washington represent her in courtly dress as bowed to by foreign ambassadors; but Mrs. Kirkland, in her interesting book, gives a more inspiring portrait of Martha Washington. She comes forth from her husband's hut in the encampment, the hut sixteen feet long by fourteen feet wide—she comes forth from that hut to nurse the sick, to sew the patched garments, to console the soldiers dying of the cold. That is a better picture of Martha Washington. Hundreds of garments, hundreds of tons of coal, hundreds of glaziers at broken window-sashes, hundreds of whole-souled men and women, are necessary to warm this December weather. What are we doing to alleviate the condition of those not so fortunate as we? Know ye not there are hundreds of thousands of people who cannot stand before his cold? It is useless to preach to bare feet, and to empty stomachs, and to gaunt visages. Christ gave the world a lesson in common sense when, before preaching the Gospel to the multitude in the wilderness, he gave them a good dinner.

Looking Ahead.

SOLOMON said long ago that there is a time to keep silence as well as a time to speak. The man who can chain his own tongue is master of his own destiny. The most successful men have been the most reticent. It is a great deal better to tell what you have done than to tell what you are going to do. One of the most brilliant addresses ever made to an army was made during our Civil War by a general who came from the West to take command of the army at the East, but that brilliant address, telling what he was going to do, was the precursor of ruin and displacement and recall. He said: "I have come to you from the West, where we have always seen the backs of our enemies, from an army whose business it has been to seek the adversary and to beat him when found, whose policy has been attack and not defence. I presume that I have been called here to pursue the same system and to lead you against the enemy and it is my purpose to do so, and that speedily. I desire to dismiss from your mind certain phrases which I am sorry to find much in vogue among you. I hear constantly of taking strong positions and holding them, of lines of retreat and bases of supplies. Let us discard such ideas. The strongest position that a soldier should desire to occupy is one from which he can most easily advance upon the enemy. Let us study the probable line of retreat of our opponents and leave our own to keep for itself. Let us look before us, and not behind. Success and glory are in the advance. Disaster and shame lurk in the rear." That was a resounding address, followed by defeat after defeat and disaster after disaster. Better report after a brave thing is done than before. Better tell us on December 31 what the year has accomplished than tell us on January 1st what the year will bring forth.

OUR MAIL-BAG.

Reader, Hampshire Co., Mass. What book or books that are very interesting and might have a tendency to create a desire to read helpful and instructive literature, would you advise one to place in the hands of a young man of nineteen who has no taste for reading?

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Library Premium of ten books, which have been selected as the very best from among hundreds of good books that were under consideration, would probably be the best and most acceptable gift you could place in his hands.

D. T. F., Village Springs, Ala. What disposition did Jephthah make of his daughter, or did he dispose of her at all? (Judges 11).

Commentators vary in their conclusions on this subject, some holding that the vow was performed literally and the maid offered as a sacrifice, while others believe that she was offered up in the sense of being consecrated to a monastic life of seclusion and perpetual virginity. His vow was to consecrate, not to destroy. Josephus, the Jewish historian, says: "He sacrificed his daughter as a burnt-offering, such an oblation as was neither conformable to the law nor acceptable to God."

J. L. Emery, Osborn, Mo. 1. Someone of influence should write or telegraph to the mayor of every city of this country, requesting that a mass meeting be called and funds raised instantly to help the stricken Armenians. 2. Could not the President be induced to issue a proclamation also?

1. Mass meetings have already been held in various cities and others are now being arranged. 2. It certainly would be an excellent thing if our government should take some action that would show at least practical sympathy, if such a course did not conflict with our settled policy of non-intervention in foreign affairs.

D. F. A. Would it be right to use money put aside as the Lord's tenth, to buy flowers to decorate the church, or to buy candies for the children of the Sunday School.

Your own conscience must guide you. The Christian is not under law. If you are honestly trying to serve God in using the money in those ways, you have a perfect right to do so. If you are seeking praise for yourself, or merely gratifying a wish to please others, you cannot regard the money as spent in the Lord's work. The motive is everything in these cases. Ask yourself why you are buying the flowers and candies, and if your heart tells you that you are doing it for the love of Christ, then the expense may legitimately come out of the Lord's tenth.

H. O. Keen, Baltimore, Md. When did Charles Wesley write "Jesus Lover of My Soul?" Under what circumstances?

Charles and John Wesley, and Richard Pilmore were holding a twilight meeting on a common, when a mob assailed them, and they were compelled to flee for their lives. They managed to hide from the fury of the rabble in a spring-house. Here they struck a light with a flint-stone, and after dusting their clothes, and washing, they refreshed themselves with the cooling water that came bubbling up in a spring, and rolling out in a silver streamlet. Charles Wesley, inspired by these surroundings, composed the hymn "Jesus, Lover of My Soul." These facts were given by Mr. Pilmore, an eye-witness, to Mr. Hicks, who stated them to Rev. I. H. Torrence, of Philadelphia.

Mr. G. M. Michaelian, Secretary of the Armenian Relief Cowmittee of Fresno, Cal., in forwarding $50 to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S Armenian Relief Fund, writes:

You can rest assured that the Armenians everywhere will cherish your journal most affectionately as they remember its Christian and philanthropic services in the time of their sore distress. We expect that your relief work will be extended to the Bitlis and Erzroom districts. The apathy of the Christian powers has been a great disappointment to us. Our bitter cry is falling on deaf ears. The moral and material help which we justly expected, has been denied to us all because of their petty jealousy of each other. The Sultan understands this, and is losing no opportunity of carrying out his cherished plan of exterminating the Christian Armenians, and thus enlarge the Armenian question. He never as bold as to drive the missionaries away from the disturbed districts, in order to have a free hand in massacring and starving to death the Armenians. The only comfort that the Armenians have is the consciousness that they are not entirely forgotten by the sympathy of Christian and philanthropic people both in America and Europe—that there are some who are willing to wipe the tears from the eyes of a bleeding nation, and save some of them by their generous gifts from an agonizing death of starvation. We hope earnestly that you will kindly use your whole influence, either with this government, and with others if necessary, in order that this infamous action of Turkey may be checked, and that you may freely forward help to those whose only sustenance depends on the outside charity sent by you. You will accept our sincere thanks in behalf of a suffering and persecuted people, for "His Name's Sake."

Subscriber, Gaylord, Mich. There are certain crimes which were punished with death under the Mosaic law and are still punishable by imprisonment. If a man were to commit one of them would God forgive him if he repents and tries to lead a different life?

There is no question of it, if he pleads the merits of Christ, firmly resolves in Christ's strength to quit his sin and trusts in him for salvation. "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin." (I. John 1: 7.)

J. W. D., Matoca, Va. Is it possible for any one to know that their souls are saved and that they are going to heaven?

It is possible. When a man accepts the offer of salvation through Christ, he is justified in feeling perfect confidence. He has no right to feel any doubt as to God fulfilling his promise, if he on his part fulfils the conditions. In fact, doubt would be insulting to God and a grievous sin.

Mrs. E. A., Whitehall, Ill. I have seen frequent allusions to Cowper's religious melancholy. Will you explain the cause?

It was due to ill health. Cowper was delicate from boyhood, and had to be removed from school on account of the harsh treatment he received from his schoolmates. He had a constitutional tendency to despondency, and was afflicted with an unconquerable shyness. He led a secluded life, and had fits of depression which returned at more or less frequent intervals. This inherited malady clouded his intellect during the last four years of his life.

J. B. Davis, M.D., Oregon, Ill., writes:

I have found that the premiums offered by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD are exactly as represented, in fact—better. This paper should merit the consideration of every Christian family in America regardless of denomination.

Constant Reader, New Salem, Pa. 1. Who assisted Martin Luther, if any one, in translating the Latin Bible? 2. What is the exact date when it was published? 3. What is the date of the death of the great reformer Zwingli?

1. The translation was mainly done during his imprisonment in the Wartburg. He had no collaborateur, although at times he undoubtedly took counsel with friends as the work progressed. The New Testament was almost wholly his own. Occasionally, when feeling the want of technical knowledge, he would lay all his friends under contribution—Melancthon, Spalatin, Bugenhagen, Justus Jonas, Aurogallus, Roser and several rabbis, who met at his house once a week, when he resided at Wittenburg. Their assistance, however, chiefly related to the Old Testament translation. 2. The New Testament appeared Sept. 21, 1522, the Old Testament in 1534. 3. Oct. 11, 1531.

I. London, Valley Park. If the Holy Spirit has departed from any soul is it of any use for that person to pray? Would his prayers be heard? Would prayer induce the Holy Spirit to return?

A person who is anxious on these subjects need not be in despair. It is evident from his anxiety that the Holy Spirit is still influencing him. When the Holy Spirit leaves a man, he becomes careless and indifferent and has no desire to pray. It is difficult- almost impossible, for man to understand the operations of the Spirit, but you may be assured that the love and compassion and long-suffering of God are infinite. Christ said that he would cast out none who came to him. With such an assurance, no man need wait to try to solve the mysteries of the Holy Spirit's work. The practical duty of closing with Christ's offer of salvation is the first thing for him to do.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

The Ashanti Expedition.

PREMPEH, King of Kumassi, is about to experience the consequences of quarrelling with the white man. The English government having secured possession of the Gold Coast, and organized the scattered settlements there into a regular colony, some twenty years ago, finds itself embarrassed in its trade and communication with the "hinterland" within its sphere of influence, by the condition of the Ashanti states, over which Prempeh is trying to enforce his sway. The trouble is a legacy from the old quarrel of 1874. At that time King Koffee reigned over all the Ashanti tribes, but when he was overthrown and Kumassi destroyed, eleven of the states over which he had tyrannized took the opportunity to throw off the yoke, and asked British help in their rebellion. This was refused, but friendly relations were established with them, and they have continued to the present time. Anarchy prevailed through the entire region, and large numbers of the people, weary of the perpetual quarrelling and fighting, left the lands and settled within the British states, where peace and order were maintained. Seven years ago the people of Kumassi resolved to reconstitute the monarchy, and decided that a lad of fourteen, Prempeh by name, was the rightful heir to the throne. He was formally installed on the golden stool, which is the symbol of royalty, and was recognized by the British representative on the Gold Coast as King of Kumassi. But Prempeh had an ambitious mother, who incited him to declare himself King of Ashanti, and to restore the lost glory of his house by bringing the eleven rebellious states into subjection. This was an extensive undertaking, involving widespread war and general disturbance of the whole region. The British tried by negotiation and the offer of a subsidy to avert the war, and they were the more in earnest because the young king and his mother had proved themselves unfit to rule. They had revived the practice of offering human sacrifices, and had organized slave raids, both of which were forbidden by the treaty of Fomana, negotiated with the British in 1874. An embassy was sent to Kumassi to bring these matters to the king's attention, but he treated it with contumely, and one of the soldiers escorting the embassy was killed. Finally, demands were formally made on the king that he abstain from attacking the Ashanti tribes, and that he receive a British resident at Kumassi, who should see that the treaty obligations as to human sacrifices and the slave trade were fulfilled. As he would not comply with these demands, an expedition has been dispatched against him. War is always deplorable, but in this case, if the facts are as represented, it would appear to be a necessity in the interests of humanity. Thousands of men and women may be saved from death or slavery by the overthrow of the tyrant.

For they know not to do right who store up violence and robbery in their palaces. Therefore, an adversary shall be round about the land, and he shall bring down thy strength and thy palaces shall be spoiled. (Amos 3 : 10, 11.)

A Callous Criminal.

An execution took place at Minneapolis, Minn., on December 11, of peculiarly revolting character. The murderer was a young man of good family. His father was the owner of large property in the city and his brother is a physician in good standing. The young man had been well educated but had persistently associated with disreputable persons and had lived a dissipated life. His victim was a dressmaker whom he robbed of her savings under the pretence of investing them for her and who at his urgent request insured her life for ten thousand dollars in his favor. Then he plotted her death and compassed it with cold-blooded atrocity. After he was condemned to the gallows he shocked all who came in contact with him by his flippancy and by his stories of crimes he said he had committed or wished to commit. When the day of execution approached he was told that any request he had to make would be granted. He asked permission to give a supper to his boon companions. He spent much time in preparing the menu which included the choicest delicacies in the markets. There was champagne in abundance and the doomed man was the most jovial person present, telling stories and jesting about the approaching execution. He went from the supper table to his cell and prepared his toilet for the scaffold. The supper and merry-making had lasted till midnight and the execution was to take place at two in the morning. On the scaffold he continued his coarse jests and interrupted them only to fulfil a promise exacted by his lawyer, which was to say, "O Lord for Christ's sake forgive my sins." Then he told the sheriff to "go ahead" and with a joke on his lips he was launched into eternity. He boasted all through that he would "die like a man," but there was no manliness in such a death. It was more like the death of an unintelligent brute and it shows how persistent wrongdoing may harden and brutalize the heart.

THE PALACE OF KING PREMPEH AT KUMASSI, WEST AFRICA.

They have refused to receive correction; they have made their faces harder than a rock. . . Surely they are foolish for they know not the way of the Lord, nor the judgment of their God. (Jer. 5 : 3, 4.)

A Strange Transformation.

An enormous fortune awaits the chemist who can make the best smokeless powder. Whatever it might cost, the Government would be compelled to have it, and every nation in Europe would want it. Chemists are well aware of this fact and are eagerly striving to make it. A dispatch from Wilmington, Del., announces that the most effective explosive yet produced has been made near that city. The inventor keeps the details of the manufacture secret for the present, but it has been learned that the basis is the peculiar one of cast-off cotton undershirts. The materials are reduced to a pulp by the action of nitric and sulphuric acids. The pulp is then treated with an alkali to bring its explosive quality under control. The result is then very much of the nature of gun-cotton, and after further treatment with agents known only to the inventor, it is ready for use. He claims that its propulsive power is no less remarkable than its absolute freedom from smoke. The extraordinary feature of the invention is that so deadly an agent should be produced from so harmless a thing as an ordinary garment. The clothing that protects the body from the cold is thus transformed into a power that will destroy the body. Man has done a great deal of that work in the world, turning the good things to evil purposes. Even in spiritual matters the process goes on.

Was then that which is good made death unto me? Rom. 7 : 13.)

Chasing a Fire.

One of the strangest fires on record is reported from Freeport, L. I. The village is lighted in primitive fashion with oil lamps, and every night a man is employed to drive around the place in a wagon with a tank of oil to replenish any of the lamps that have burned low. On Dec. 14, he was on his rounds as usual and was out of the wagon filling one of the lamps with his can, when the lantern in front of the wagon exploded and set the vehicle on fire. The flames might have been easily and quickly extinguished if the wagon could have been reached; but the sudden glare startled the horse and he ran away. The draught caused by his rapid flight soon carried the flames to the oil tank and the whole stock of oil caught fire. An alarm to the local fire-brigade brought out the engine, but the location of the fire by that time was a long way off. The horse was so frightened and so anxious to escape from the heat, that he was careering at his utmost speed through the roads and no one could tell where he might go and whose property he might be the means of setting on fire. The engine gave chase, but the horse with the portable fire had a good start and a lighter load. It was a long time before he was overtaken and detached from the burning wagon. The horse wanted to be saved from the fire, but in his fright he took the course that delayed his being saved. It often happens that a similar course is taken by persons who have become alarmed for their spiritual safety. Instead of committing themselves to Christ to deliver them from evil, they try to reform and quit their sins unaided. To them the way of safety is that prescribed to the Israelites when they were flying from the tyrant:

Fear ye not; stand still and see the salvation of God. (Ex. 14: 13.)

Sinking a Ship to save it.

A shipowner in New York in conversation with a friend who had recently enjoyed a voyage on one of his vessels surprised him by telling him that the fine ship whose praises he was uttering had once been under water. Some seven years ago the ship was at her dock in the East River waiting to have a quantity of ballast taken out of her hold before taking in cargo. Early one morning smoke was seen issuing from the hatchways and an examination showed that in some unexplained way a fire had started and had just reached a compartment in which a quantity of hay was stored. The hay caught fire quickly and the flames shot up to a great height. The river fire department was quickly on the scene and deluged the ship with water. The scuttles were opened, too, and in a short time the ship went to the bottom. The owners and the fire department agreed that the best hope of saving her was to sink her. She was not badly injured and the work of raising her was at once begun. In a few weeks she was again afloat, thoroughly repaired and newly painted. She had proved a staunch vessel and had since done good service. Ordinarily no greater calamity can happen to a ship than to be sunk, but in this case it preserved her for future usefulness. If the owners had refused to have her sunk the fire would probably have consumed her. It is so with some lives. When the fires of avarice and lust and passion are consuming the soul, there is nothing that can save it but some great calamity that submerges it, from which by Christ's power it rises regenerated.

Whosoever shall seek to save his life shall lose it and whosoever shall lose his life shall preserve it (Luke 17:33).

BRIEF NOTES.

At the Recent Meeting of the Board of Managers of the American Bible Society a letter was read from Rev. M. Bowen, the society's agent in Constantinople, presenting an urgent plea for help on behalf of the Armenians. He said that the reports of suffering and danger brought in by the colporteurs were heartrending. The American public will be more disposed to credit statements so endorsed than those issued by the Turkish legation in Washington which say that the Sultan is protecting and providing for the Armenians.

Rev. W. Whipple, who is Agent for the American Bible Society in Persia, reports that both at Oroomiah and Hamadan there is an unusually large demand for copies of the Bible in Persian and there have been extensive sales.

A Successful Rescue Work Among fallen women is being carried on by Mrs. Williamson in one of the worst districts of New York. She has worked for many years, as our readers are aware, in the dives and disreputable haunts of the city and has helped many women to quit their evil lives. Mrs. Williamson has hired a house in which she can temporarily shelter free of charge women who want to reform. She will need some assistance in paying the rent. Any contribution for this purpose, sent to us, we shall be glad to forward to her.

A Remarkable Revival has Followed the united efforts of the churches of Melrose, Mass. The leading members of the various Evangelical churches met and raised a thousand dollars to pay the cost of hiring a hall. An invitation was sent to Rev. C. L. Jackson to lead the meetings and all the pastors assisted him in his labors. An excellent choir was organized and there was a house to house canvas of the town. The results have been wonderful and the united efforts have induced a brotherly feeling among Christians of the different denominations which is in itself a blessing.

The Receipts for Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church for the year closing October 31, were $1,242,659.73, an increase over last year of about $54,000.

Governor Greenhalge, of Massachusetts, in his Thanksgiving Day address at Lowell, put the theme of Christian citizenship in epigrammatic form by saying: "The Christian ought to be a citizen, and the citizen ought to be a Christian."

At a Missionary Prayer Meeting Recently held at Warsaw, Ind., an excellent address was given by Mr. I. B. Moosha, a Persian who has come to America to receive theological training, intending to return to Persia to preach Christ to his people.

Successful Evangelistic Meetings were Recently held in Denver, Colo., by Frank L. Smith, of New York. During the Young Men's Christian Association's week of prayer Mr. Smith gave his time wholly to the young men. He afterward held union meetings at the Hyde Park Presbyterian Church.

The United States Minister at Madrid has now notified the State Department that the Spanish authorities persist in their determination to delay the authority for the American missionaries to return to the Caroline Islands. This much desired privilege, it appears, is dependent upon the humor of the governor of these islands who insists that the missionaries would not be safe. The American Board commenced work in the islands forty-three years ago. It was carried on until 1890 when the Roman Catholic priests stirred up opposition and the missionaries were expelled.

Rev. Samuel Dunham, of Binghampton, N. Y., says that the services of Dr. Munhall in that town which have just closed, have been a great blessing to the entire community. Every Protestant church has received additions from the converts at the revival. Six hundred cards were signed by persons desiring to make profession of Christ and unite with Christian churches. At the concluding meeting on December 4, the ministers of the various denominations were present, and after Dr. Munhall's last words of advice to the new converts, shook hands with them and promised them their spiritual help to lead a consistent life.

The Children of Armenia.

A Glimpse of a Native Kindergarten at Sivas. Little Tots at their Object Lessons.

THESE are sad days for the mothers and children of Armenia. Thousands of those who, but a few months ago, were in comfortable if humble homes, are now widowed, orphaned, and destitute, cast upon the mercies of a world whose people (in that region at least) know no mercy.

Mr D. M. Bedekian, an Armenian teacher now in America, has given to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD some interesting information regarding the early tuition of the children of his native land. The photograph on this page shows Mr. Bedekian and his kindergarten class at work in their school-room. It was taken under happier auspices, and before the terrible scenes of massacre and carnage, which have recently caused such suffering in Asiatic Turkey, had begun. Mr. Bedekian's school was in Sivas, one of the districts afterwards devastated by the Kurds, and it is more than probable that some of the little pupils have perished with their parents in the late massacre there, while it is certain that the others are, in common with all Armenians in that section, homeless and in misery.

Mr. Bedekian is an example of self-culture and is highly esteemed among his countrymen. He studied Froebel's system of teaching, and in order to get a thorough knowledge of the kindergarten system, he went to Smyrna, in Asia Minor, and was there trained under the leadership of an American lady, Miss Nellie Bartlett. He proved himself an apt kindergartner, and equipped with a certificate, went out to work more vigorously for the best education of the little ones. But wherever he went, the young man encountered difficulties and hindrances at the hands of the Turkish authorities. The government closed his school and threatened to imprison him if he should attempt to renew his efforts to establish a kindergarten. This was an unexpected and hard blow to his energies, but he is not a man to be easily discouraged. He came to America, where he now enjoys the luxury of liberty and freedom, and he is preparing to resume his work with more enthusiasm than ever!

Mr. Bedekian is only one amid many thousands of similar cases of persecution by Turkey. No Armenian is safe where Turkish authority prevails, and especially is this true where the Armenian is prospering in his calling. A thriving merchant, a busy professional, or a prosperous farmer is especially marked as the prey of the fanatical Moslems, who daily implore Allah to cut off the "Christian dogs" from the face of the earth.

Noble Armenian Boys and Girls.

Director Alexander McLachlan, of the American High School in Smyrna, writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD as follows:

"You will be glad to know that your journal is gaining a large number of admirers among the Armenians of Smyrna. A few weeks ago, I brought the case of the suffering people of old Armenia before the Armenian pupils in our High School for Boys here, and their sympathies were so stirred up that they resolved to form themselves into a relief committee, and for the last four or five weeks have been contributing regularly for this purpose. Among our boarders in the school an additional sacrifice has been made in their agreeing to give up an important item in their morning bill-of-fare for breakfast, with the result that during the past few weeks we have forwarded to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD special Commissioner and to our own missionaries at Van the sum of forty-one Turkish liras (or $180.) The American Girls' School here has shared with us in this good work, and have contributed seven liras of this sum. About seven liras more were contributed by some Armenian young men and other friends—the balance by our boys here in the High School. We are continuing to send weekly contributions, and now that the news has come to us that the Turkish Government is not permitting Mr. Howard to proceed to the famine-stricken districts we are addressing our remittances to the missionaries at Van. It would encourage our boys and girls to see their contributions acknowledged in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD."

Spurgeon and the Lunatic.

An English pastor, who was well acquainted with the late Pastor Spurgeon, recently related in one of his sermons the following incident: "One day a visitor called at Nightingale Lane with the request that he might be allowed to see Mr. Spurgeon at once on urgent business. On entering the study, the stranger closed the door, stood with his back to it, and began, 'What's this you've been telling the people at the Tabernacle about me?' 'Why, nothing, my friend.' 'Oh, yes, you have, and I've come to have it out with you. I'm not going to stand this sort of thing.' Seeing that the man was stout and strong, and that he carried a stick like himself, Mr. Spurgeon adopted a soothing, matter-of-fact, reasoning tone. 'Well, my friend, you are a stranger to me. I don't think I ever saw you before, and certainly I don't know you. If I know nothing about you, I can't tell anything, can I?' 'No,' said the man, 'I suppose you can't,' and then, after a meditative pause, asked, 'Have you a brother?' 'Yes.' 'Is he much like you?' 'No, I can't say he is.' Then came a furious burst. 'No, it wasn't your brother, it was you; and I mean to settle the matter. Do you know that I have been in an asylum?' 'Have you? I am sorry to hear that.' 'Yes, and when I was there I was so strong that it took ten men to hold me.' The man began to flourish his stick, and make threatening advances, and then he asked, 'Are you strong?' This was the preacher's opportunity, and power of will over brute strength at once asserted itself. 'Yes, I am, terrifically.' 'What, as strong as ten men?'

"Mr. Spurgeon sprang to his feet, assumed a tragic tone, and shouted, 'Yes, I'm stronger than a hundred men; and if you don't get out of this room, I'll crush every bone in your wretched little body!' The man trembled with fear, turned to the door, threw it aside, rushed down the stairs, out through the doorway, and along the road, as if pursued by furies, leaving his stick behind as a memento of his visit. Mr. Spurgeon was not a little relieved when he heard that the man was caught."

The Gospel in Macedonia.

Faithful Missionaries Carrying the Truth into Remote Places.

IN a letter from Samokov, Bulgaria, to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Mrs. Elizabeth R. Terziera, a reader of this journal, writes:

"We are greatly interested in the relief work in Armenia. We all feel for them here in Bulgaria, and in many places it is talked that the time has come when that cruel, tyrannical nation—the Turkish nation—must leave Europe for ever and fly to Asia or off the face of the earth. Only those who have suffered from the Turks know their terrible cruelty. They are torturing and killing our brethren by hundreds in Macedonia, and especially those who took part in the recent fruitless révolution are suffering unspeakably—they and their families.

"If traveling and touring were only more safe in Macedonia, the work of God would prosper better than it does now. But still as it is, it is prospering beyond expectations. The people are more simple-hearted and good and earnest, and receive the truth with greater readiness than the people here. There were such cheering reports read here at the annual meeting of the missionaries last summer from the Macedonian missionaries, that we were very glad to hear them and were greatly encouraged. Every town and village is opened for work, and the people are eager to hear the truth, and in many places they have congregations. In some places they need to have churches and school-houses built but are not permitted by the government. Two active missionaries, Dr. H. House and Mr. E. Haskell, began their work about two years ago in Salonica, and have traveled up to Servia working in towns on the boundary where there are Servians living. There are some very good Christians there. Dr. House said that if the missionaries cannot enter Servia from the proper door—Belgrade—they will enter it from the back door—Macedonia. We pray and believe that they are now on their way to that part of Servia where there is not one missionary.

"We heard lately that these missionaries had hardly any funds for traveling this year. We trust that some good friends will be raised to help in the work in Bulgaria. Now we are collecting help from all our friends in Bulgaria and many have given generously for the building of a library in Sophia, our capital, and a hall or big room up-stairs where there will be different good books and papers to read, and coffee or tea served instead of beer or wine, and where lectures shall be given to the young men who are encompassed with temptations on every side, and nothing good to draw their attention or help them to a better life. The place is bought now, and there is a little money towards the building, but it is very insufficient."

"A Heart of Gold!"

An Incident in the McAll Mission Work at Marseilles, France.

THERE is at Marseilles in connection with the McAll Mission, a flourishing society, called "The Society of the Blue Cross." Its hall is situated on the busy quay, where people of all nationalities congregate, and on the blue shutters is a notice that a meeting is held on Sunday afternoons "to reform drunkards." There are thirty-three drinking-places on the quay for the manufacture of drunkards, and one only to save them! A goodly number of its members are Christian women who have enrolled themselves in order to save others. Some have been raised from the lowest depths of degradation, and are now honored and honorable members of society. Pastor Brown gives the following incident as having occurred there: "Tounead is a strong, muscular man, who could carry three hundred pounds of wool on his shoulders from six o'clock to twelve o'clock without taking a rest. He was a hard drinker, and has swallowed thirty-five glasses of absinthe neat in a day. When drunk he was a terror to his neighbors.

"A Christian youth, saved through the Temperance Society, requested prayer for him, for he had "a heart of gold." So a few met to pray for "the golden heart." He attended the meetings and signed the pledge for a week; fell and signed again. He was invited to the little prayer-meeting, and the sight of the little group on their knees dazed him. His heart was enlarged—it became "great." He hurried from that meeting with a strange, new sensation, and falling on his knees in his poor home, he prayed this prayer: "O, God, if you are a God, reveal yourself to me; make me a good man; change my heart." With strong crying and tears he cried to him who could deliver; and he said, "Something took place here (pointing to his heart); I don't know what, but I was another man. I did not swear again, I who swore with every breath. I did not feel fight, and I had no desire to be drunk. Can you explain that, Monsieur Brown?"

His prayer gives the solution. "Oh God, I thank you. You have turned the devil out of me, and delivered me from a dirty world, and put something good in me which I cannot explain, but I thank you very much." The "Golden Heart" is a priceless gem, picked up in the gutter, and brought by the prayers of a few of God's dear children to the Refiner of silver. He is soon to be married, and I have just been invited to be present at the happy ceremony."

The Gospel in Bohemia.

Rev. Dr. Norman Walker, who recently made a tour through the lands of Huss and Luther, refers to a visit at Prague and to his attendance at a Bohemian service in that city, at which our missionary, Rev. Dr. A. W. Clark, preached. Dr. Walkec was much surprised to find the audience consisting largely of men, the rule in Austria being that women outnumber the men at religious services. Dr. Walker concludes his commendation of the work done by the mssionaries of our Board in Austria by saying, "In a land where the moral tone is in the last degree low, it is effectively helping the way of rescue and reform. In short, the impression left on my mind is this: that in very few countries indeed is an evangelistic enterprise being carried on which is conducted so wisely and with such energy and success as that of the American Board in Bohemia."

ARMENIA'S BLACK CHRISTMAS!

Massacres of Christians Continue, While the British Warships Lie Idly at Anchor—The Red Cross Undertakes the Relief Work—Clara Barton and "The Christian Herald."

THE BRITISH FLEET OFF SALONICA.

Ships that Rocked at Ease while Christians Perished.

ONCE more the example of a body of Christian men and women, working together earnestly, harmoniously and prayerfully for a common purpose, has been the means of stimulating a nation to activity in the same direction. The Armenian Relief movement, which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD started several months ago, has now become national, and the hearts of the American people, touched by the terrible story of Armenia's woes, are now yearning to help the sufferers. Such material aid as has already been sent, has been administered to the best advantage through the American missionaries in Van direct, as well as through the American Board missionaries in Constantinople who are in communication with the mission workers in all parts of Armenia. But this work of relief has been conducted under extraordinary conditions, the Turkish Government hampering and opposing it at every point and making it clear to all the missionaries that the deliberate intent was to allow the Armenians to die of cold and hunger.

Abdul Hamid had decreed that the Christians should be exterminated; those who had survived the massacres at Moosh, Sassoun, Dalvorig, Trebizond, Erzeroum and Harpoot, would die quietly if let alone. They were mere Christian dogs—all of them, and deserved to perish for the glory of Allah and his prophet. And when the missionaries, faithful to their duty, and at the risk of their own lives, continued to extend succor to the starving ones, their mission buildings were burned down, their converts slain and they themselves compelled to seek a place of shelter. And thus by threats, killing of converts, incendiarism and other violent measures, the Turkish officials have at last made it well-nigh impossible for any of the missionaries to continue to act as administrators of the relief sent from America or Europe.

This is now the case at almost every one of the important points in Asiatic Turkey. Even at Van, the regular mission work, as the cable informs us, is at a standstill, and Dr. Kimball and her associates, are doubtless struggling with great difficulties in the relief work. Yet, with characteristic courage, our American missionaries are the last on the field, for the European missionaries abandoned the relief work some time ago, in compliance with Turkish demands, and the relief funds raised in England, together with those contributed in this country, were thereafter and up to the present time, distributed by the American missionaries. Had they, too, given up the struggle, nearly half a million homeless and destitute Armenian Christians of all ages—a very large proportion of them women and tender children—would have been left to perish, either by famine and exposure to the elements, or at the hands of the Turks.

Realizing that even this last means of dispensing relief might at any moment by Turkish caprice be cut off absolutely, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD last week decided to enlist the sympathetic and practical co-operation of the Red Cross in the work in Armenia. Protected by special International Treaty, to which Turkey is a signatory power, it is not probable that the Sultan, with all his craft and arrogance, could successfully object to the Red Cross entering Asiatic Turkey. In response to our request and to many others of a like nature, Miss Clara Barton, the President of the American Red Cross Society, after taking counsel with her associates in the organization, has accepted the summons to active duty and will undertake the work of relief distribution. Miss Barton will take the field in person at the head of her corps of trained workers. She will doubtless have the full co-operation of the European Red Cross societies, as the International President of the Red Cross in Switzerland, has already cabled his approval of her brave determination.

Who has bravely Undertaken to carry Relief to Armenia.

Meanwhile, the news from Armenia is of the gloomiest character. The apathy of the European governments encourages Turkey to continue its infamous career of persecution and massacre. Incredible as it seems, the so-called "Christian powers" have apparently no intention of interposing to prevent the Sultan from carrying out his diabolical plan of Armenian extermination to its full completion. Yet, so critical is the situation at Constantinople, that a day may precipitate a change that will involve much for Armenia among others.

Details of the recent massacres in Erzeroum and Trebizond prove that the slaughter was prearranged, and that the Armenians were not in any sense the aggressors. The Erzeroum massacre started at the office of the Vali in the government building. An Armenian priest of Tevnik was in the building endeavoring to gain an audience with the Vali, when he was shot down by Turkish murderers. Then followed a horrible saturnalia of carnage, during which over 1,000 Christians were slaughtered. After the butchery, the dead victims were dragged by neck and heels into the cemetery and cast into a long, deep trench, not unlike the death pit of Geliguzan—the murdered fathers, mothers and sweet, innocent babes, all calm and peaceful in the sleep of death, flung down like carrion. Nothing more horrible or more pathetic could be imagined than that scene at the cemetery two days after the massacre. The spaces between the poor dead bodies were filled with the skulls and thigh-bones that had been taken by the sacrilegious Moslems from the oid, upturned graves and then, all were covered up together out of sight. The survivors dared not even express their grief.

No less shocking is the news that comes from Kaisarieh in that part of Asiatic Turkey known as Cappadocia, where a frightful massacre of Christians took place recently, accompanied by the outraging of women and the looting of the shops and houses. This, it is declared, was done in obedience to orders from Constantinople. Over 1,000 were killed and the fury of the Kurds, not, satiated with slaughter, vented itself in the mutilation of the inanimate bodies.

The Harpoot massacre, three weeks ago was another butchery carried out under orders. Sixty Christians fled to a church in the vain hope that its walls would furnish them a shelter against those who were crying for the blood of the Armenians. They were permitted for a time to believe themselves secure, but suddenly the church was surrounded by a great number of Kurds. The doors were then blown in, and the Christians thought that they would be massacred within the sacred structure. They were not. Their captors took them one at a time outside the church, and there, heedless of the cries for mercy from women and children, killed them, either by shooting or stabbing them. The first victim was the Protestant pastor of the church, who, as he was dragged out, bade the others, if they had to die, to die as Christians. He met his death like a martyr. Some of the refugees in a very agony of terror offered to abjure their faith and accept Islamism, thinking thus to save their lives. The offers availed them nothing, for their insatiable enemies, after accepting them, dragged the converts out and killed them one by one. The Armenian church has been turned into a mosque, and the Protestant church into a stable.

It is impossible, the cable tells us, to describe the present condition of the Armenians who have survived these and kindred afflictions. Van and Trebizond are filled with fugitives from the pillaged villages adjacent to those cities. Great numbers of women and children, almost completely exhausted from fear and lack of food, have reached the two cities. Their condition is most deplorable. They have been robbed of about everything they possessed. Large numbers of them were barefooted, and with only a single garment as their covering in the inclement winter weather. There is no doubt that many hundreds of those who escaped death at the hands of the Kurds will die from the effects of the exposure they have undergone, and thousands must fall victims of starvation unless quickly cared for. The promptest aid that can reach the sufferers from foreign countries will hardly avail to prevent an enormous death list from these causes, but unless aid is soon furnished in unstinted measure from some quarter, the deaths from famine will reach an appalling number. It will be a black Christmas for Armenia!

To Europe's shame it has to be recorded that the fleets of the great powers have lain inactive at anchor within a few hours' sail of Constantinople, while these atrocities have been going on unchecked. Not a gun has been fired nor a hand lifted to stop the flow of Christian blood. The great war-ships of England lay in the Gulf of Salonica as quietly as though the whole world were at peace. England was pledged by treaty in 1878 to secure good government for Armenia, a pledge that has been basely broken. Her thousands of innocent men and women have for weeks and months been appealing in vain to the civilized powers of Europe to save them from the Moslem swords and the Moslem lust, and they are even now dying—expiring with the name of Jesus upon their lips—while the great fleets rock idly on the blue waters of the Mediterranean. Other generations, in more enlightened days, will look back with indignation and horror at the supineness of Europe which has consented to this colossal crime of the age—the extermination by the wicked and barbarous Ottoman power of the defenceless Christians of Armenia. Such an attitude invites the judgment of heaven against those nations that have a share in the infamy.

The Red Cross managers are now busily preparing for the work before them. They will require not less than $100,000 in money and $400,000 in pledges before entering the field. It is expected that their relief work will continue six months or more.

Clara Barton's name and the story of her life-long devotion to the cause of humanity, are known throughout the Union. Miss Barton was born in Oxford, Mass., in 1838. She had a thorough education in the public schools of that city, supplemented by a course of study at Clinton, N.Y. For some time she was a teacher in the public schools of Oxford, and subsequently was principal of the first public school at Bordentown, N. J. She was engaged in the Patent Office at Washington in 1861, when the war introduced her to the work that has made her name famous in all lands. Resigning her position in the Patent Office, she devoted herself exclusively to hospital work. As the need increased, she hired a vehicle and went to the scene of the slaughter—Culpepper Court House being her first destination.

Miss Barton was on the battle-fields of Cedar Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Falmouth, and at the siege of Charleston. How many lives were saved in those scenes of slaughter through her prompt ministrations, none can estimate. With her band of trained nurses, she did noble service, and continued in it to the end of the war.

With a frame exhausted by continuous labor she went, by the advice of her physicians, to Europe to recuperate. She was there when the Franco-Prussian war broke out, and she immediately offered her services. At Metz, in Paris, and in other scenes of the conflict, she ministered to the wounded and comforted the dying. The Emperor of Germany acknowledged her services by the presentation of the Order of the Iron Cross, and other distinguished personages gave her grateful proofs of tangible esteem. Since then, as President of the American Red Cross Society, she has rendered beneficent services in the Ohio floods, the Michigan fires, the Charleston earthquake, and the Johnstown flood and other calamities of national import. During the great famine in Russia, when THE CHRISTIAN HERALD chartered the steamer Leo with a load of food for the suffering peasants, the Red Cross also sent generous relief. Miss Barton is one of the noblest women of the century, and her memory will long be cherished by a nation which she has inspired to admiration by her life of self-sacrifice. Her photograph which appears on this page was taken expressly for this journal.

Contributions to the Armenian Relief Fund will be found acknowledged on page 894. All contributions will be promptly acknowledged in these columns.

Courtesy in Church.

PARENTS do well to teach their young folks to be courteous in all the relations of life. There is a special courtesy which might be learned in regard to behavior in church, and especially toward strangers. How often we see the stranger in a church standing apparently at a loss, while the regular members of the congregation are comfortably seated.

Several years ago, two strangers, well dressed young men, entered a church in a small town and seated themselves in an empty pew. Presently a woman, the owner of the pew, came to the door and motioned to them to come out until she should pass to the further end. They were offended at her discourteous manner and marched out of the church, refusing to listen to any invitation to remain.

One day a scholarly-looking man, plainly dressed, came into a church in Holland and took a seat near the pulpit. A few minutes later, a haughty lady swept up to the pew, and seeing a stranger in it, ordered him by an imperious gesture to leave it. The stranger obeyed, and going into one of the seats reserved for the poor, joined devoutly in the services. After they were over, the lady's friends gathered round her and demanded whether she knew who it was that she had treated so rudely. "No; some pushing stranger," she replied. "It was King Oscar of Sweden," was the answer. "He is here visiting the Queen." Her mortification may be imagined.

There is no reason why the same rules of politeness that prevail in the drawing room should not be exercised in the church, as far as consideration for others is concerned. It is comparatively a small thing to show a little kindness to a stranger, but to the recipient it means much and goes far toward turning into a means of spiritual blessing a service that might have been marred and rendered unprofitable by an act of discourtesy.

Children in Iceland.

The real work of instruction in Iceland is performed by the parents during the long winter evenings, writes Ruth Shaffer in the Chautauquan. Then the family surrounds the centre table, a large kerosene lamp suspended from the ceiling and great chunks of burning peat ablaze upon the hearth rendering the room comfortable and attractive. The books are got out and several members of the family assume the duty of teachers. Meanwhile the women knit and spin, the men read, and the old folks as they sit with their feet to the fire hold the little children on their knees and weave tales that greatly delight the imagination of the wee folks. All children are regularly examined by the pastor of the parish. Every child must possess an elementary education before being confirmed at about the age of fourteen, and as confirmation carries with it certain important civil rights the observance of this ceremony is rigidly practiced. The Icelanders are mostly Lutherans and are stanch Protestants and the most loyal, innocent, pure-minded people in the world. Crime, theft, debauchery and cruelty are almost unknown among them. It is entirely safe for any woman to ride unattended through the country.

Woman and Home.

For home there is absolutely no substitute. Language, which is but the crystallized thought of nations, tells the story. Home without woman is unknown to human speech. The military officer has his "quarters," the sea-captain his "cabin," the herdsman his "ranch," the student or clerk his "room," or, perhaps, his "den;" associated men have "clubs," "societies," "lodges." Woman only has "home"—and man as associated with her. The mother can make a home for a grown-up son, a sister for a brother, a daughter for a widowed father. Mother and daughter, grandmother, daughter and granddaughter, perhaps, or a bevy of sisters, will have a "home." But father and son, or a group of brothers, never. If they maintain for a time a "house—apartment—residence," that is all. The word and thought of "home" drop out. There is need of just the peculiar kind of affection and tenderness natural to womanly character, in order that home may be.

"Help Others," a Good Motto.

"A sure way to be happy is to do something for somebody," is the remark of a plain philosopher. It is true, for the sum of life is service—service to others, and not to self. Self is a narrow space. This should be impressed upon young men who have just opened the door of life, and old men who are just before the door that opens to the life beyond. Life is not an existence for self. It is this service that is the grand exponent of a successful life. To determine what success a life may attain is to see how much a life may accomplish for the bettering of humanity.

Christmas Decorations.

The beautiful custom of decorating homes and churches at Christmas with evergreens is one held in common by all. Our forests teem with conifers, and other evergreen trees and vines, that are of themselves bright and attractive. There has come up lately a desire for genuine holly and mistletoe, imported at Christmas. The expense is far in excess of the decorations furnished by our wild woods, and in regard to the imported holly, its beauty is far below the standard of the home-grown branches. The leaf and berry of the American holly are unsurpassed in beauty by any in the world. The English mistletoe is not more beautiful in leafage and richly clustered pearly-white berries than that obtained from our own forests. From New England, south, the holly flourishes in every State, and the berries turn a brilliant scarlet just in time for Christmas. That is why they are always so fresh and beautiful. In combination with palms, ivies, and blooming plants, and with mistletoe, pine, and arbor-vitae, nothing surpasses our home-grown holly for Christmas decorations.

Four Marks.

These are the four marks of the child of light. He is a picture of God. He is a chaser away of evil. He brings gladness with him wherever he comes. And he does not live to himself.

THE ROAD TO DAVIES.

BY JAMES WILLIAM McCARTHY.

HE paused upon the highway,
At the turnpike in the road—
A dear old man with silvery locks,—
And face that earth-cares showed;
His clothes were old and rusty,
His stiff gait slowed by years;
Yet behind it all there seemed to be
That faith which calms all fears.

"Say, lad, which way to Davies'?"
He asked a youngster small;
"I've got to get there somehow
'Fore snow begins to fall.
These limbs of mine feel weary,
And the air most cold has growed;
I've traveled away from Sintown,
And forgot the one right road.

"You see, I'm Davies' brother,
And he haint seen me in years.
Since youth I've been a pilgrim—
In this world of smiles and tears.
The other day I found out
That he lived in this 'ere clime;
So I guessed I'd cease to wander,
And join him Christmas-time.

"For I always thought it happy day
(Before my manhood's dawn),
To be with all the loved ones
On the day when Christ was born.
And tho' I've been a prodigal,
No more again I'll roam;
My peace is made: pray tell me, lad,
The road to Davies' home?"

"There are two roads here—be careful, sir,
For oft' I've heard it said,
That on the left—the wider one,
By many folks is tread.
And also, too, that every one
That takes that rock-strewn way,
Ne'er reaches Davies' mountain home,
Where shines a perfect day.

"But to the right, my good old man,
That narrow path you see,
Will take you straight up to the place
Where happy people be.
No thorns will tear your weary flesh,
You'll meet no unkind fate,
And a right good, merry welcome
Will greet you at the gate."

"There are two roads here—be careful, sir.'

"Well said, my honest country lad,
I'm on my way again;
A Merry Christmas to you!
Let your light so shine to men!
The road to Davies' mountain home
Is the right road; like the wise,
I'll take it." . . . . Dear friend, why not
It leads to Paradise. [you?

"MY SONG SHALL BE OF JESUS."

MY song shall be of Jesus,
His mercy crowns my days,
He fills my cup with blessings,
And tunes my heart to praise;
My song shall be of Jesus,
The precious Lamb of God,
Who gave himself for ransom,
And bought me with his blood.

My song shall be of Jesus,
When, sitting at his feet,
I call to mind his goodness
In meditation sweet;
My song shall be of Jesus,
Whatever ill betide;
I'll sing the grace that saves me,
And keeps me at his side.

My song shall be of Jesus,
While pressing on my way,
To reach the blissful region
Of pure and perfect day;
And when my soul shall enter
The gates of Eden fair,
A song of praise to Jesus,
I'll sing forever there.

CHILDREN AT THE TABLE.

TABLE manners are, or ought to be, an important part of the training of children. If possible, the little folks should always meet with the father, mother and older members of the family at the table. It is not always wise to crowd them off to a side table all by themselves. They should not lead the conversation; they should be taught never to interrupt their elders, but they should be allowed to assist in the conversation which will teach them to express their thoughts intelligently, and parents should see that they use the best language. Children can be early taught to eat quietly; to avoid noises in swallowing and chewing; to use the fork and not the knife, that with the fingers can be taken bread, fruits and cake; the proper use of the napkin, and that they are not to display any marked likes and dislikes. Older members of the family should be as polite to each other and to the children, as to any guest; then you will not be haunted by the fears, that in some unguarded moments, the children will bring themselves and you to disgrace, for table manners "are sure indications of social, mental and moral culture."

Child-love for Mother.

Happy they whose first years have been infolded in parental piety, who begin their course in this world with a religious atmosphere about them, taught, as the beginning of all instruction and all discipline. Thank God if you are so fortunate as to be a child of many prayers. "Who cares for mother?" said a boy one day to his sister, who told him that mother wished him to leave his play on the sand and come home. "My boy," said a gentleman who overheard the remark, "don't speak thus. I despised my mother, and took my own way, and broke her heart. But, after her death, oh, what would I have done to be able to call her back! I was miserable until I remembered how she taught me to pray, and I cast myself on her God. Oh, how much I owe to my mother and her prayers!" The boy's eyes kindled, and his voice trembled, as he said, "I will never speak lightly of my mother again, sir; no, never!"

Taking cold is a common complaint. It is due to impure and deficient blood and it often leads to serious troubles. The remedy is found in pure, rich blood.

Requests for Prayer.

At the Converts' Sunday Afternoon Prayer Meeting at the Bowery Mission, prayer was offered on Dec. 8, in accordance with the requests of the following persons, who also ask the prayers of our readers:

For the Conversion of Relatives and Friends: "In Christ's Name," Manchester, Va., for a father and [illegible] ——"Believer in Prayer," Sayville, L. I., that a dear son may give his heart to the Saviour.——S. F. McG., Lewiston, Idaho, that a dear friend who is an infidel may [illegible] Christ.——"Reader," Ontario, in behalf of a father that he may have full assurance of salvation; also [illegible] receive grace to overcome a passionate temper; also for a brother, that he, too, might be saved and kept from sin.——"Anxious Reader" in a Mining Camp in Colorado, that a man and his wife, once earnest Christians, but now wanderers from God, might be forgiven and regain God's favor.——"Believer," York, Pa., that a young man who some time ago professed conversion, might have grace to live near to God, and be saved from growing careless and worldly; also that another young man who is a great trouble to his widowed mother, might be converted.——"Praying Mother," Sarissa, Tex., for two sons who call themselves "Liberals" in religion, but are really sceptics, that she may live to see them converted to Christ.——"A Friend," Louisville, Ky., that a friend and his family might be saved.——"Reader," Virginia, Va., for the conversion of a young man, the only son of an afflicted mother, and that he may enter the Lord's service.——"Connecticut Reader," that one who is completely discouraged, might be convinced that the Lord is ready to pardon the sins of all who are truly penitent, and that he might have assurance of acceptance, and re- [illegible] spiritual mental and physical strength. ——Constant Reader, Redfield, Dak., that some dear ones might be made new creatures in Christ.——M. A., Kiowa, Kans., for her husband and five sons, that they might all become children of God.——R.C. N., Avonia, Pa., for the conversion of her husband, [illegible] would keep her children from being contaminated by evil example.——M. C. E., Racine, Wis., on behalf of a dear son who fought for his country and nearly lost his life in the great war, that God would save his soul.——"Subscriber," ——, that [illegible] may return like the Prodigal, with [illegible] and tears and prayers for forgiveness; also for a son-in-law of blameless character, but not a Christian.——"Believer," Pine Plains, N.Y., whose parents are not saved, that they may turn to Christ before the shadows fall upon them.——"Believer in Prayer," Hudson, Mass., that a dear friend, sick and without employment, might be led to God in his trouble, and be delivered from his embarrassment. ——M. S., Upton, Mass., whose husband has deserted her, that God would look upon him in his wan- [illegible] and save his soul, delivering him especially from his appetite for drink.——M. J. S., Hickendon, Pa., for the blessing of God on a whole family.—— "Believer," Mo., that God would save the souls of two wicked sons-in-law.

For the Restoration of Health. "Subscriber," Lunsbury, Conn. For the recovery of one who has suffered a long time from a nervous affliction.——"Believer in Prayer," York, Pa. For recovery, if it be God's will, and if not, for grace to be submissive.—— C. D. H., Alderson, W. Va. Who has been heavily afflicted for seven years that God would mercifully give relief.——T. A., Louisville, Ky. For the restoration of health in all ways.——J. S. A., Forest, O. That God would grant health if consistent with his will and grace in any event to be faithful to him.—— "Believer," Philadelphia, Pa. For the recovery of two persons suffering from a nervous trouble.—— Mrs. M. E. W., Elmira, N. Y. Who is ill with pulmonary disease, and is anxious about her family, [illegible] that for their sake she may live.—— M. H. W., West Haddam, Conn. That she may be [illegible] able to provide for herself.——"Subscriber," Bolton. For the recovery of hearing so as to be more useful in God's service.——I. H. N., Missouri. For recovery from a terrible affliction.—— M. F. H., Milano, Tex. For the restoration of health. ——W. G. Cain, Tyler, Tex. That a beloved daughter whose affliction has not been relieved by the physicians who have treated her, may be healed by the Great Physician.——"In Christ Name," Manchester, Va. For a mother and sister in delicate health that God would sustain them spiritually and physically.——M. M. M., South Salem, O. For a son now in a hospital, and who seems almost beyond hope of recovery, that God would raise him up.——Invalid, Fall River, Mass. That God would bless the means now being used for recovery; also that a loved one now suffering may be restored.

For Special Blessings. G. T. W. Calvin, I. T., for guidance and support under a critical ordeal, and [illegible] and wisdom in [illegible] be [illegible] ——M. A. J., Bowling Green, Ky., for grace, and to be kept in the narrow way.——G. E. V. D., Cannon Falls, Minn., for help that under all future circumstances faith may never falter.——C. E. S., Caldwell, N. Peace in Answer to Prayer.

Some time ago (writes P. A. A., St. Augustine, Fla., to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD), a deep sorrow came upon a friend, a sorrow of which she could speak to no one, only the cry of her heart was, "My burden is greater than I can bear." When her sorrow was the greatest she would often exclaim, "Has God forgotten to be gracious? Is his mercy clean gone forever? Are his promises nothing?" In her great distress she picked up the Bible, and read: "But verily God hath heard me; he hath attended to the voice of my prayer. Blessed be God which hath not turned away my prayer nor his mercy from me." She read it over and over, it fascinated her; she believed it; it was true God had heard her prayer, but although she believed it no comfort appeared to come into her heart. So great was her sorrow nothing could rouse her from it, but her cry to God was continually, "Remember the word on which thou hast caused me to hope, remember thy promises, Lord."

For over a year she sorrowed almost as one who had no hope; her minister wondered that she could believe and yet sorrow so. Night after night she lay awake crying to God in her agony of heart and soul, but one night she fell asleep as sweetly as a little child. In the morning she awoke and peace was in her heart. Everything was strange to her. She thought of her sorrow; it was there in all its dreadful reality still, but peace, unutterable peace, was in her heart. It was so strange, so grand, and beautiful, she could not understand it. If only some word had come with it she would know it was God's peace sent to her, she thought. While she was wondering there came to her like strains of sweetest music, the words, "But verily God hath heard me; he hath attended to the voice of my prayer. Blessed be God which has not turned away my prayer nor his mercy from me." And now, four years after, peace is still in her heart, although sorrow is there, too, but peace above and over all.

FATHER AGAINST SON

OR,

How the Curse of Horse-Head House was Lifted.

BY J. C. COWDRICK.

AND he has found that I was not to be trifled with, Joe," said Hilton. "But, he will be back again, like the prodigal son, when he has tried faring on husks for awhile, I am thinking. I don't know where he is going, but I will give him about a week to cool off in, and two to come back."

"Well, I hope he will, for it is a shame for a fine young feller like Billy to go to ruin that way."

"He will see it, Joe, when he gets his eyes open. Here he had a fine business to step right into, some day, and no need to do a day's real work as long as he lived. For my part, I can't see what he was thinking about. But then, he was not all to blame; it was that preacher; he has turned the whole town crazy. I'll be glad when he stops his mill and gives us a rest."

"There don't seem to be much sign of his stoppin', the way things went last night, Mr. Hilton."

"Then we'll have to see if there isn't a way to make him stop, that is all. A pity, if the people of this town can't have something to say about it. He will go it till he hears of something that will surprise him, I shouldn't wonder."

"Don't see what can be done, Mr. Hilton. And when you talk about the people, he has got the whole people with him as it is. That is to say, all but you and Wheeler, and a few of us old residenters; but, we'll stand by you as long as there is anything left to stand on!"

The landlord of the Horse Head House stopped short and was thoughtful. "There is something in that, I guess," he admitted. "Well, let it run its course, like any other epidemic, and meanwhile Wheeler and I will do business at the same old stands. Our old patrons will find us here when the tide turns the other way. I have seen these things before, though never such a one as this, and there is always a turning."

Others came into the barroom, and the matter was dropped. Hilton had spoken more lightly than he felt. His thoughts were upon his boy, and the wrong he had done him.

He was glad the truth was not known, and yet it galled him to think how the boy had shielded him. If he had only told the truth—not that he had told a falsehood, but if he had only out with it all and given him ground for bitterness. Worst of all, his son's parting words kept ringing in his head, and he could not still the voice, strive as he would.

But, to return to Will. He and Horace Freeman had entered into conversation as soon as they started from the widow's cottage, and Will had to tell some of the facts concerning himself. Not that his conversion was any news to Horace, for he had heard of it before; but the fact that he was leaving home, and was going to offer his services to Deacon Barkmore, that was a surprise.

When they reached the deacon's place, Will got out, thanked Horace for the favor, and went to the house. He applied at the kitchen door, and it happened to be the deacon himself who opened to him, and the deacon's surprise on seeing who it was, was great.

"William!" he exclaimed. "What has brought you here?"

"I heard that you wanted a hand, Mr. Barkmore, and——"

"You have heard of some one, eh? Much obliged to you for stopping to tell me——"

"No, you are wrong, Mr. Barkmore; I have come to apply for the job myself, if you think I would be of any use to you. I am strong, and you will find me willing. I would like to try it, anyhow!"

The farmer stared at him in amazement. "Have you taken leave of your senses, Will Hilton?" he demanded. "Come in and tell me the meaning of this."

"Why, you were at the church last night, Mr. Barkmore; you know all about that part of it. You said if I wanted a friend to come to you, and here I am. I have had to leave home."

"I see, I see;" the farmer muttered as he closed the door. "Set down by the fire, William, and we'll have a talk the first thing, and then we'll see about the other. Mother," calling to his wife, "come here and see if you want me to hire this chap."

Mrs. Barkmore came, and when she saw who it was she, too, was surprised.

The farmer stated the few facts he knew in as few words as possible, and then turned to Will and asked for the whole story.

Will told it all, save only the incident of the whipping, and as soon as he had done, Mrs. Barkmore turned to her husband and declared that it was their Christian duty to do what they could.

"How old are you, William?" the farmer asked.

"Past twenty, sir," Will answered.

"But not of age yet."

"Not till in September, sir."

"There is something in the way, then, to start with. Your father can come and take you, if he wants to; and he can demand your wages, anyhow."

"But you will not get into trouble by hiring me, will you?" asked Will.

"Oh, no; that part of it is all right."

"Then never mind about the other; father will not come for me, and you can turn my wages over to him."

"Well, I will take you on, then. Your pay will be ten dollars a month, and your keep, if you stay; but I am half afraid that you will back out at the end of a week or so."

"Not if I can do the work to suit you," Will assured.

"Then there is another thing; you will have to cart wood for me, right into town. That will be galling for you, and I have my doubts about your holding out as you have begun. Still, you are a sturdy fellow, and you are the best judge of that."

"I will try it," said Will.

CHAPTER VII.

Facing the Enemy.

The bargain was struck.

Will Hilton had begun his new life.

"When will you come on?" asked Deacon Barkmore, "immediately?"

"Right away, sir," Will answered. "My bundle is out by the gate. Had I not got the job I was going straight on."

"Well, that shows grit, anyhow. We'll see what the weather is going to do, and if it breaks away we'll get ready to cart wood to-morrow. You will find a big difference."

"Brevity is the Soul of Wit." Good Wife, You Need SAPOLIO

"That is what I have sought, sir."

"And what is the matter with your face?" asked Mrs. Barkmore.

"Something struck me and cut it," was the matter-of-fact explanation Will gave.

He went out for his bundle and was shown to the room he was to occupy, where he changed his clothes, and when he reappeared he was ready for whatever might be given him to do.

He was a man in size, as we have tried to make plain, and it has been mentioned that he was sturdy and muscular.

There was no stronger youth in all Silvervale town.

By mid-day the sun struggled through the clouds, and in the afternoon the wood sleds were loaded to make ready for an early start to the village next morning.

Will was up before daylight without having to be called, being used to getting up early, and performed the chores nearly as well as the deacon could have done them himself, stranger though he was.

They had an early breakfast, and then Will set out with his load for Silvervale station.

This would be, as he felt and knew, his greatest trial.

He looked like almost anybody else than Will Hilton, son of the landlord of the Horse Head House.

He had on a suit of rusty-looking overalls and jumper, which he had found in the barn, having asked permission to wear them, for he wanted to save his clothes all the wear possible; and with an old cap, which the deacon had given him, pulled down over his ears, and the plaster on his cheek, he was almost in disguise.

On the way he met no one who recognized him, and it was not until he came to Wheeler's Hotel, on entering the village, that any one spoke to him.

There, his team turned out of the road toward the hotel, to stop, and he had to speak to them sharply.

The deacon's last hand had been in the habit of stopping there, and for that reason had been dismissed. The deacon and his family, driving to church one Sunday, the deacon sitting in a dreamy fashion, had met with the surprise of finding themselves come to a stop at the hotel; and that had told the story.

Just as Will shouted at the team, the door of the hotel opened and Joe Mosley came out.

He recognized the voice, and looked up quickly.

It was known in the village, by this time, that Will had hired out to Deacon Barkmore.

"Hello!" the old toper cried, with a drawl. "Bless my eyes if it ain't Billy Hilton! Come here, Wheeler," calling back into the barroom; "come and see this sight!"

Will felt the hot blood mount to his face, but he paid no attention.

The landlord came running out, followed by all who were in the room, and all laughed heartily.

"Hello, Saint William!" the landlord shouted, derisively. "You look well on that kind of an altar! You will have to get that team converted, next, or come into town the back way!"

The crowd laughed the more at this, but Will looked straight ahead and gave them no heed.

The road was heavy, and the team moved slowly.

Joe Mosley, who had been on the point of setting out for the Horse Head House, anyhow, left the others and soon caught up with the sled.

"You look out o' place there, Billy," he declared.

"You think so, Joe?" Will cheerfully asked.

"Yes, you do; you was cut out for somethin' better'n haulin' wood."

"Well, may be I will do something better, one of these days; we shall see about that."

"Your old man—I mean your father; he gives you a week to get tired of this, and two weeks to come back in; but I'll give you a month, for I know your grit. How do you like it?"

"It is not a question of whether I like it or not, Joe, and I may get tired of it, as you say; but to coming back, never!"

"You speak as if you mean it."

"I do mean it."

"Deacon Barkmore is one of the hardest old skinflints in this whole county, and ——"

"There, Joe, I guess that will do. I have heard that of him, I admit, but I have yet to find the actual proof of it, and until I have found such proof I won't believe it."

"Well, now that you are one of the flock, Billy, it is only nat'ral that you should stick up for the brethren, I s'pose. Seein' as you don't ask me to ride, I will trudge along and let the folks know you are a-comin'. No doubt they will feel cur'ous to see you."

Will said no more, and the "bummer" forged ahead in the direction of the Horse Head House, not a little piqued.

He announced Will's coming to every person he met.

When Will came to the church he looked toward it with a new feeling in his heart. He had always had a certain amount of respect for the house of God; now he loved it.

The parsonage was next to the church, and Will saw Mr. Gillman coming down the path to the gate.

The minister looked, but did not know him. He nodded, however, and Will said good-morning.

The minister responded, looked closer, and then seeing who it was, hurried forward to shake hands and speak a word of good cheer.

Will told briefly the circumstances which had placed him in that position, but did not stop long, as his time was not his own; and when he went on he was sure of one heart in sympathy with him.

From there he could see the sign of the Horse Head House, a swinging sign with the picture of a horse's head, and he tried to nerve himself for whatever might next occur, with a silent prayer for help that he might be able to bear patiently anything that might be said.

Joe Mosley had already arrived there.

As Will approached, all in the barroom came out, all save his father, and Will was greeted with taunting gibes and jeers.

Among those present were the son of the bank president, and two or three of his set, and they remembered the offer the landlord had made to them on the night of Will's conversion.

"Here comes one of the fold!" exclaimed one.

"Don't you see that halo around his saintly head?" cried another.

"Brother Hilton will now lead us in prayer," remarked still another, and all roared with laughter.

Within, Reuben Hilton heard, with a flush of shame—shame of a commingled nature this time, perhaps; and in the room over the barroom the mother and sister were peering through closed blinds.

"What a disgrace!" cried Mary.

The mother was silent. She did not speak her secret thoughts.

Will did not look, did not seem to hear, but drove straight ahead, his eyes fixed upon the road.

"Why, he's deaf!" one cried.

"No, no; he hasn't cooled off enough for that, yet. I'll stir him up!"

This one grabbed some snow and quickly pressed it to a ball and threw it at Will, and the others following his example, they pelted him unmercifully.

He made four trips that day, and each succeeding day, when the weather was suitable, for several weeks. He had a hard struggle for a time, for all manner of wicked tricks were played upon him and evil jests without number were thrown at him, but he bore it all, and his was the victory—and a greater was just ahead.

Meanwhile, the revival had come to its close, and already some had fallen away, and it was prophesied that Will's turn would come; his time was extended a little, that was all. But they did not know him; they did not know the full extent of his determination—his determination with God's help; he never expressed it without adding that.

An Arab Funeral.*

AN Arab funeral is one of the most pathetic of sights. Although you know beforehand that the howling and mourning accompanying the services are usually hired by the hour, they are so effectively performed that your sympathies are enlisted in spite of yourself. The paid mourners come first in the funeral procession, and they are usually women. Their number is governed very much by the same circumstances which regulate the number of carriages at some of the funerals in our own land. If Achmed Bedawi hired a dozen mourners at the recent funeral of his fourth wife, when a child or a wife of Hassan Ali is to be buried there will be at least thirteen mourners; for, although Hassan is not quite as wealthy as Achmed, his family pride requires that he should have "quite as good a funeral." Clothed in white and tossing their arms frantically aloft, the hideous creatures come. They part the air with their large handkerchiefs and give forth the most dreadful howls with imposing fervor. The real mourners can only be traced by the slight response they give to the shrieks of those who are under their pay. A motley crowd of men and boys follow the women, and some of them carry the bier on their shoulders. Others chant a sort of a dirge which is led by the beating of a drum, and many carry flags. All the sadness possible is put into their voice—"No God but God, and Mohammed is his prophet" is the funeral cry, "Allah! Allah! Allah! Allah!" is the doleful response. Talking and laughing are interspersed. At the grave, all gather around and share in the bowing, swaying, and moaning, and swirling until they are tired, when the grave is filled and the howling ceremony is repeated while the procession returns. Some such scene as this must have met the eyes of Jesus, and excited his divine pity, as he approached the city gate of Nain. He restored an only son to his mother just as Elisha had done over nine hundred years previously in the little town of Shunem, but a short distance across the plain from Nain. The difference in treatment and regard between the boys and girls practised by the people who live in Palestine now is in striking contrast with that of Jesus who expressed the same sympathy for the distinguished Jairus when his "one only daughter lay a-dying" as he did with the "great lady of Nain," for the little girls in Syria do not receive very much consideration and love from their Mohammedan parents, as a rule. When a girl is born into a family there is about the same amount of howling as there is at a funeral. The neighboring women come in and condole with the mother over "the dreadful misfortune which has happened to the family," and they "wonder what great sin the father has committed, to be punished by having a daughter born." The helpless little one also comes in for her full share of fault-finding. If two women are journeying together with their children and the little girl becomes tired or sick, the mother is urged by her companion to "throw her away, because she is only a bint and not worth any trouble." A "bint" is a girl. There is a proverb among these people that "When a girl is born, the stone of the threshold of the house weeps forty days." As she grows up, the little girl is cursed, kicked, and abused. She is apt to see her own mother treated in the same way, and she learns to take it for granted that it is to be her fate. Ask her father how many children he has, and if she is his only child, to your astonishment he will answer, "Not any." Inquire to whom the little girl belongs and he will answer, "Oh! she is nothing but a bint—we don't count her." When a boy is born there is a different state of things. All the neighbors come and compliment the father and rejoice with him, and the father immediately changes his name, for the fathers are always named after their eldest sons. Aboo means son, so if the baby boy is named Salim, then his father become Aboo-Salim [the father of Salim], though his name previously may have been Mohammed. But if no sons are born to him he is condemned to bear the name which was given him at his birth. Sometimes, when he is beloved by his neighbors and holds an honorable place in society, he is allowed to take the name he would have named his son if he had had a son. If a Mohammedan is away from home he will never think of writing to his wife or daughter, but always addresses his letters to his son. I often saw my dragoman do this; and although much of the letter was for his wife, it was addressed to his son who was but seven.

The Offical Prayers of Islam.*

THE non-fulfilment of Ottoman promises in regard to Christian subjects, and the frequent massacres of the latter are an exact fulfilment of the official prayer of Islam which is used throughout Turkey, and daily repeated in the Cairo "Azhar" University by ten thousand Mohammedan students from all lands. The following translation is from the Arabic:

"I seek refuge with Allah from Satan, (the rejeem) the accursed. In the name of Allah the Compassionate, the Merciful! O Lord of all Creatures! O Allah! Destroy the infidels and polytheists, thine enemies, the enemies of the religion! O Allah! Make their children orphans, and defile their abodes! Cause their feet to slip: give them and their families, their households and their women, their children and their relations by marriage, their brothers and their friends, their possessions and their race, their wealth and their lands, as booty to the Moslems, O Lord of all Creatures!"

All who do not accept Mohammed are included among "the infidels" referred to in the prayer.

A NOVELIST'S TESTIMONY.

Hall Caine, the famous novelist, who recently visited this country, says that he attributes his success in part to the fact that he has always been a diligent reader of the Bible. "The Bible," he said, "has for me very much the same appeal that it had for Bunyan. There is no book in the world like it, and the finest novels ever written fall far short in interest of any one of the stories it tells."

The Australian "Dry Air" Treatment of Asthma, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Coughs, Colds, Laryngitis, Etc.

45 Harmon St., Jr. ROCHESTER, MASS., January 20, 1895.

Your invaluable remedy, Hyomei, has certainly cured me of Catarrh, that had defied the power of many celebrated doctors. I obtained and tried Hyomei, and am perfectly satisfied with my investment. I am delighted to state that I find that Hyomei breathes from my air cells. It seems to penetrate the affected part like magic. I believe it to be the greatest preventative of pneumonia ever discovered. Hyomei has also cured a friend, Miss Annie McMurty, of a most chronic case of Asthma. For three weeks she has sat in her chair day and night. She retired to her bed the evening of the day she began using Hyomei, and slept naturally. She has had no return of Asthma since using Hyomei, and cheerfully.

MRS. HATTIE DAVIS.

Hyomei is a purely vegetable antiseptic, and destroys the germs which cause disease in the respiratory organs. The air, charged with Hyomei, is inhaled at the mouth, and, after permeating the minutest air-cells, is exhaled through the nose. It is as much a specific to irritate, and gives immediate relief. Consultation and trial free at my office.

Pocket Inhaler Outfit, Complete, by Mail, $1.00, consisting of pocket inhaler made of Gendanged hard rubber beautifully polished, a bottle of Hyomei, a dropper, and full directions for using. If you are still skeptical, send your address and a pamphlet shall prove that Hyomei cures. Are you open to conviction?

LEE, Illinois, October, 1, 1895

The old man I fitted 2 years ago wore your truss about 90 days and said he was cured. Saw him last week and although he was 63 years old and a hard worker, he is as sound as when a boy. Yours truly, M. C. MOSS, M. D.

STANARDSVILLE, Va., Sept. 5, 1895.

I have had splendid result from your truss in quite a number of cases of grown people. E. W. SIMS, M. D.

DERRICK CITY, Pa., June 3, 1895.

I received my truss the 27th and since I have had it I have taken more comfort with it than any I ever have had. The 1st day I got it I put it on and mowed grass all day and I never noticed that I had it on me. ALEX. BROWN

TUNIS, N. C., July 21, 1895

About 3 years ago I bought one of your trusses. I wore it about 6 months and it has made a final cure. Was badly ruptured. I would have written to you about this before but wanted to see if my cure was permanent. O. G. HATTAMAN.

The Consideration of Cost often prevents thoughtful housekeepers from adopting improvements which they very well know would add to their comfort and save their strength. No such obstacle however, stands in the way of the use of the modern cleaner, which is a blessing to any home. It helps keep house by keeping the house cleaner. It is not only the best preparation of the kind, but it is also by far the cheapest—large packages cost only 25 cents. Get a package to-day. Be sure it is the genuine. Look for the darke twins—the trade mark of the sole manufacturers—

GOLD DUST WASHING POWDER

By combining lavish expenditure for its variety of reading-matter with economy in mechanical make-up, The Sunday School Times has become invaluable to Sunday-school workers, and yet is easily obtainable. In view of the outlook for the paper, the Publishers are adding to its printing-plant a new perfecting press of the latest pattern, capable of turning out 10,000 completed papers per hour. The Editors have arranged with the foremost lesson-help writers of two continents to contribute each week to the lesson department. And a glance at the list of special contributors will show, in part, what may be expected during 1896 from other famous writers and skilled workers. These are signs of progress. It is a sign of progress in any Sunday-school when that school decides to have the help which The Sunday School Times can give. The subscription rates are so low that even the small, struggling schools can afford to have the paper. There are thousands of schools of all sizes and kinds that never try to afford to be without it. And now is the time to arrange for using The Sunday School Times in your school during 1896.

Published Weekly at the following Subscription Rates: One copy, one year, $1.50. To ministers, missionaries, and theological students, $1. Two or more copies, to individual addresses, $1 each. Five or more copies in a package, to one address, 50 cents each per year. Specimen copies free.
